COMMISSIONERS ASK COMPLIANCE

Want Township and Borough Officers to Comply with Requirements of Election Laws so that Complications May be Avoided.

At the meeting of the county commissioners on Tuesday attention was called to the fact that, on or before July 20th, the assessors of the several boards, town councils, and school boards, must file with their clerks, George W. Baker, a certificate setting forth the offices to be filled in the respective townships, boroughs, and wards.

In the absence of this certificate the county commissioners will be unable to advertise primary elections for the offices mentioned in the respective districts.

The commissioners have found that some clerks indicate the offices to be filled but fail to indicate the length of the terms. This is just as important, as the list of the offices and most, in every instance, be shown on the certificate filed.

In boroughs having wards there are offices-at-large to be filled as well as ward offices. Clerks are advised to be specific in their certificates in this respect also. A certificate regarding county offices to be filed is required to be filed by the chairmen of the various political parties.

Careful observance of these requests and compliance with them will, the commissioners believe, save a great deal of inconvenience in preparation for the coming primaries.

After their certificates are all in the hands of the county commissioners, they will advertise the primary elections for the respective districts.

Petitions for the office of president and associate judges must be filed with the Secretary of the Commonwealth on or before August 23rd. These petitions may be signed by any qualified elector, but not more than a number equal to double the number of votes to be cast for the office. Petitions for county, borough, and township offices, petitions may be signed only by voters with respect to party politics.

County office petitions must contain at least 100 signatures, borough and township office petitions not less than 10, for inspectors of elections not less than 5. These petitions must be filed at the office of the county commissioners on or before August 31st.

Voters may sign the petitions of two candidates for county commissioner, poor director, and auditor, but as there are that many to be elected

BOROUGH SCHOOL DIRECTOR QUITS

Refuses to Serve Remainder of his Term because he Believes Faith has been Broken with Playgrounds Association.

Robert C. Miller has resigned as a member of the Gettysburg School Board, a body with which he has been connected for almost four years, during the first two of which he served as its secretary. The board at an adjourned meeting Tuesday evening was notified of his action but did not take it upon it.

In his letter of resignation Mr. Miller gives no reason for his withdrawal but stated this morning that it was because of action taken last Friday night when the majority of the membership voted against the proposition to have the janitor of the High Street School serve as custodian of the Recreation Playground and pay his entire salary. Mr. Miller claims that this action constituted a breach of faith with the Playgrounds Association in view of a resolution adopted some time ago which provided that the one man should fill both positions.

William H. Barretta was offered the janitorship but declined to serve. The Playgrounds Association then submitted the name of Harold Strickhouser, which a majority of the board refused to confirm and re-elected Mr. Sharrer as custodian without the playground appointment.

It was thought at first that the Playgrounds Association was not being given fair treatment that Mr. Miller felt constrained to resign, the remainder of his term. He points out that the playgrounds are under the local schools, the successful base ball team of the spring term which was never supported by the organization, was provided for practice and games, and that the Association's appropriation on Prof. Reynolds for his direction of its affairs was unnecessary and he feels that some assistance should be given in the maintenance of the grounds if the public are to have all the use of it expected.

Mr. Miller's term would have expired this fall.

WAS MUCH APPRECIATED

Mother of Late Scoutmaster Writes Girls and Boys.

The following letter has been received by the Gettysburg Camp Fire Girls and the Scouts from Mrs. J. W. Keller, mother of John Keller, who was drowned recently near Shenandoah:

My dear young Friends:-

I want to thank all for your kind expression of sympathy and love in our time of bereavement.

It was an awful blow to us, but we have the grand hope of feeling, that such as we miss from our home, it is his gain in Heaven. He cannot come home to us but we can go to him, and that is our most comforting hope.

I was so sorry we could not shake hands and speak with the boys and girls when I was there in your dear Gettysburg to assist in the last sad services over our boy. We hope some time in the future to come to Gettysburg and may have a chance to thank all who helped to make my boy happy for I know he was happy in his work among you. God's blessings and give you success in your work.

We are sincerely,

MRS. J. W. Keller and family.

THOSE AEROPLANES

May Race over Lincoln Road still really Take Place.

The Lincoln Highway Association publishes this week a story to "Greet Lafayette" in which the transcontinental aeroplane race "over" the Lincoln Highway, from New York to San Francisco, which is scheduled to be held some time this summer by the Aero Club of America. The Committee on Aeronautical Maps and Landing Places has under advisement the selection of landing places along the Lincoln Highway. Announcement of these points will be made later from the headquarters of the club, 297 Madison Ave., New York City.".

NEW IDEA WILL HELP GETTYSBURG

Governor Brumbaugh Responsible for New Slogan which, it is Believed, will Increase Number of Visitors to this Place.

Gettysburg will get its full share of the benefit to be derived by the new movement to "See Pennsylvania First" inaugurated by Governor Brumbaugh. He hopes to bring the attention of the people of this state to the folly of visiting neighboring states before first seeing the beauties of their own.

A year ago the Governor went into every county in the state for political election, but while en route he saw more than ever political prospects. He returned inspired with the magnificence of Pennsylvania scenery and improved with the importance of encouraging the people to "see Pennsylvania first."

Now he means to lead a large number of representative men through some of the most picturesque portions of the State in order that they may see for themselves and go forth as missionaries in this great campaign of sight-seeing in the wonderland they know as home, but constarring the beauties of which so many of them have no knowledge of. New York, New England and the West know so little.

The Governor is quite aware that the heretofore rough condition of Pennsylvania roads will be largely responsible for conditions as he finds them. But under Commissioner Lonsdale's direction the improvement in the ways of Pennsylvania are being put rapidly into effect and practically by fall all of the main highways will compare favorably with those of other states. It is the Governor's plan that a pair of one summer can make them, and that they will be ready for inspection by next summer.

The work done on the highways this fall will be considered merely as a new movement felt in this section and Pennsylvania's roads by next spring, yet seen Gettysburg will doubtless include this place in making up the routes for their auto-service outings.

STUNNED

Paul Reed, Visiting Brother, Is Knocked Unconscious.

During the electrical storm Tuesday evening, Paul Reed received a shock which rendered him unconscious. Paul Reed left McSherrystown to visit his brother at Biglerville. NEW POST OFFICE FOR NEW OXFORD

Brick and Stone Structure will Add Much to Appearance of Centre Square and Provide Suitable Quarters for Office.

With the razing of the Warner Building located on the public square at New Oxford, the residents are witnessing the demolishment of the oldest building in the town. They recall the many merchants who conducted stores of various kinds within the building.

The building will be replaced with a modern up-to-date building which will add much to the appearance of the Square. It will be two stories high, of fine pressed brick, made of buff colored brick with stone trimmings. When completed it will be used as a post office. The building is being erected by Postmaster Warner.

According to the most accurate history that could be compiled from interviews with the late proprietors of the brick building, now being torn down, was erected in 1800 by William Sturgeon. At that time there were about twenty houses in New Oxford, the majority of them crude affairs. Resident of the league, who has given my orders that no flowers be sent, but I am signed but two players on my present team—they were Troy and Cook."

HANKS QUITS AS LEAGUE UMPIRE

Succeeds Laughlin as Manager of the Hagerstown Team. Another Regular Umpire is at once Appointed. Hanks will Play.

Following a contention with President Boyer, of the Blue Ridge League, Joe Laughlin, manager of the Hagerstown team, resigned Wednesday night.

Within an hour after Laughlin's resignation had been accepted, Eugene Hanks, who has been one of the league umpires during the season, resigned his position as umpire and accepted the managership of the Hagerstown league. He will likely play one of the infield positions.

The resignation of Laughlin did not come as a great surprise to many fans, as it is known that there had been some friction in the past few weeks with the league president, concerning the management of the team. It reached its climax on Wednesday.

When interviewed Joe Laughlin had the following to say concerning his resignation:

"I have never been manager of the local team, but merely 'manager in name only.' I have been working under the direction of Mr. Boyer, president of the league, who has given me my orders regarding the team. I was

At one time Wednesday, seven of the Hagerstown players went on strike and leave the club, but after a little talk they changed their minds.

SUNDAY SCHOOL PICNIC

Presbyterians Enjoy Pleasant Day at Nearby Creek.

On a beautiful shaded green along Marsh Creek a large and representative company from the local Presbyterian church and the Lower Marsh Creek church picnicked Tuesday. Games, walking, and music and dancing furnished diversion for all. A beautiful supper greeted the company as they gathered about the tables at noon with generous appetites. Threatened rain kept a few away who expected to come in the later afternoon, but the picnic passed off well by.

Remarks were heard from all quarters in high appreciation of the kindness of Joseph C. Redding, who had extended the use of the ground for the picnic, and William Redding and Clay, who had provided so bountifully and thoughtfully for the pleasure of the company, and of those members and friends of the schools who had so generously made contributions in carriages for the transportation of the children.

The success of the outing is largely due to the efficient work of the committee in charge, Miss Lillie Hoke, Mrs. John Sheads, and Misses Ruth Bigham, Annie Monfort and Martha Dickson.

APHTHOUS FEVER

Nearly Eight Hundred Farms in Thirty-four Counties Affected.

Over 15,000 head of cattle and more than 13,000 head of hogs have to be destroyed in the outbreak of foot and mouth disease which has just come to an end in Pennsylvania, and by the time the federal and state quarantine is lifted, 800 farms for cattle, and property taken to check the disease, it is estimated that the cost will run over $1,250,000.

The disease, which began in 1914, prevailed on 788 farms in thirty-four counties. The previous outbreak, which occurred in 1908, affected 100 farms in thirteen counties. Lancaster was the worst sufferer with Berks next.

Miss Margaret Phillips has gone to Hanover where she will visit friends for several days.

THREATEN LIFE OF MOVIE MAN

An effort to kill Francis X. Bushman, the motion-picture actor, who is a number of relatives living in Gettysburg, was made in San Francisco, according to a dispatch received from that city. The attempt was made by a well-dressed woman, who evidently had been writing to the actor, but whose letters were unanswered.

"The police are searching for a beautiful woman who is alleged to have made an attempt to kill Francis X. Bushman, an actor, at the St. Francis hotel. A package addressed to Bushman was received at the hotel, and when it was opened it was found to contain a bomb, the fuse of which had burned to within an inch of the explosive.

The package was left by a well-dressed woman. Bushman is to Los Angeles, so the package was opened by his advance agent, H. Reichenbach. In addition to the bomb the package contained a note, reading:

"God will join us in Heaven. You have failed to answer my letters. H. C."

HAVE MANY BOOKS

Officers Chosen for the Biglerville Library Association.

At a meeting of the Biglerville Library Association the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: president, Blake Fisher; secretary, Corrine Dentrich; treasurer, Mrs. N. C. Thomas. The librarian was not elected. It was decided to continue the membership fee of $1.00 for the ensuing year.

The association owns nearly three hundred books which are loaned to the members for two weeks. It also keeps one of fifty books belonging to the Pennsylvania Free Library Commission, which are free to any one applying for them.

The case is exchanged every six months. The library is located in the Thomas Building, and is open every Thursday evening from 7 to 8 when the librarian will be glad to receive new members as well as welcome the old ones.

PEACH CROP ON SOUTH MOUNTAIN

More than a Million Baskets of Fruit will be Shipped during Coming Weeks. Growers Take New Methods for Disposing of It.

The South Mountain Fruit Growers' Association estimates that approximately 1,000 acres of peaches will be about 1,200,000 baskets, or 600,000 bushels, will be shipped by members this year. Of this immense amount of fruit peaches contributing estimates it will have 900 cars, Chewsville 50 cars, Smoketown about 600 cars and Edgemont 50 cars. There are about 800 full bushel baskets to a car.

The association has selected the North American Fruit Exchange to handle its output at so much per car, feeling that it has taken a step which will mean many dollars in the hands of peach growers. The plan does away with the commission man, with whom many growers have had sad experiences in the past, and with a fruit exchange to handle the output it is claimed that the peaches from South Mountain can be sent to this city or that, wherever market conditions are the best at the time of shipping.

This plan eliminates the haphazard method of shipping, which has characterized the handling of the peach crop for years, by which every individual grower shipped where fancy dictated, whether market conditions were favorable or not.

The peach crop on South Mountain this year about the Smoketown section, promises to be the largest ever gathered there. Many of the trees are overloaded and growers have had their trees in order to gain more room for peaches, while everything by the way of a peach tree is loaded and the trees were never better looking and the fruit of a finer appearance as this season of the year.

Watch up Night Habits of Base Ball Players.

The Chambersburg Public Opinion says:—"For a little afternoon on Thursday night, between 11 and 12 o'clock, a few fried hen sandwiches with onions. Each of the five ate five sandwiches and some ate more. Four Mercersburg boys have been going back to a saloon. This may account for some of our late games, as such habits do not help to win."

INCOGNITO

By RUTH GRAHAM

Jack Mentzweiler was a brother sweet, and he was the only brother he or except mine—himself. But sometimes when they were alone he still called me by his childhood name. Incognito, he would say, and I would know that he was in a playful mood, and that I was to be treated as a stranger. Then I would be dressed accordingly, but as soon as we had finished a meal, we believed the gentleman would leave, and I, strictly speaking, would be myself again.

When time required he dressed accordingly, but as soon as we had finished a meal, we believed the gentleman would leave, and I, strictly speaking, would be myself again.

Mr. Mentzweiler was also fond of being left alone in the house, and he kept them all in order himself. He was plenty of work to do, because the one thing in the machinery of one of his mental cogs was to see everything that would don his overalls and fix it. One day he had been working about with a long enough to become man-handled and, before he realized the damage, was called to try the machine with a view to seeing if what he had wrought would hold. He preferred this course to risking it in a car filled with his children.

His did not change his overalls or wash the smudges off his face or hands, but started down the road looking for all the world like a greasy mechanic. The machine was a motorcycle, and Jack was about to turn back when he saw ahead of him a big sight from a machine that had stopped and look hopefully at it. Thinking his slight need assistance, he went on till he reached it. There was a young woman Miss Ethel Ashmore, a young lady he knew very slightly, but Mr. Mentzweiler felt no perceptu in the man in overalls, with his face covered with smudges and grease, on whom she had met quickly. Jack's mechanical mind was much pleased at the prospect of an assignment.

"Would you be so kind as to assemble my machine and tell me what's the matter with it?" he asked.

Jack pulled his machine to the side of the road and looked about for the trouble. He soon found it and said that there was a broken rod that caused the valves to be required. This involved taking the machine to the garage.

"Oh, dear!" exclaimed the girl "What shall I do?"

"I can get a rope at one of these farms herebouts," suggested Jack. "Hitch your machine to mine and take it to my house. Then we can go to a garage the rod I will put it in for you."

"I wish you would," said the girl. "I'll pay you for what you do."

Jack re-entered his machine, ran down the road a bit to a farm house and returned with a stout rope. Then, having hitched the two machines together, the girl got into hers to steer it, and Jack put his own machine and dragged the load to his garage.

"Now I'll take you home," he said. "Tomorrow I'll have the needed part, and I'll put in the superfluous rod. I'll liver the machine at your house."

"I could you have it there if at all easily go for a drive at that hour."

"Why, sure, she of it."

Jack enjoyed the part he was playing, and, expecting that Miss Ashmore would recognize him if he put on good clothes, drove her home as he was. When he left her at the door she said:

"If you will let me how much the bill will be I will pay it now."

"I think that of the rod to replace the broken one will be about $3. Will that be satisfactory to you?" he said the union. To crate no hoot. My time is on the bill is about three hours-Call it all $5."

The young lady put her gloved fingers into her pocketbook and drew forth a tiny dollar gold coin and dropped it into Jack's outstretched hand. Then, turning, she went into the house, without a word.

The next afternoon at precisely 4 o'clock a motorcycle came to the door of Ashmore's door. She heard it and, as expected, that it was the machine. It went out dressed for a drive. She was disappointed to see that it was not the overcast of the mechanic, instead of a young man in livery with a flask bombic tailor, a double breasted, fancy waistcoat, a voluminous cravat pulled out archlet, white or his boots were—in short a dandy. She was not sure that the slightest sign of hirey on his immaculate appearance. Something had stood uncovered.

"Where is the mechanic, Miss Ashmore." "Why, Mr. Mentzweiler?"

"Excuse me, but I came upon you yesterday when you broke down."

"You don't mean—"

"That the mechanic who rescued your machine and brought you home."

"Heavens," exclaimed the tally, bit her lip and looking worried I pail you for."

She flushed with his thumb the coin she had given him which he had rep in his pocket. "I—I—"

"How it is. I have served it, and I am glad to have done it. To serve you is it was my happiness to do you."

Miss Ashmore blushed and as confused as she could her companion said:

"A good automobile mechanic should also be a good driver, and I will hire you for my chauffeur this afternoon!"

"Yet for him this time. One moment will suffice, but I shall be happy to serve you, all the same."

"The two got into the car and sped away.

Only who heard the story remarked, "It was a shrewd move on Jack's part." And they do.

MORGAN LIKE HIS FATHER IN APPEARANCE

Likeness of Financier, Shot by Crank, to Parent Often Made Subject of Comment.

JOHN PIERPONT MORGAN, who was shot by a crank at Glen Cove, N. Y., succeeded his father at the head of the great international banking firm when the latter died in 1913. The younger Morgan, an only son, was 26 years old when he joined the firm of his father and was considered by many to be a mere figurehead. He soon began to show his worth, however, and by 1900, graduated from Harvard in 1890 and was married in 1892 to Miss Jane Norton Grew. There are two sons and two daughters. The younger John Spencer Morgan, born in 1867, was married on June 15 of this year to Miss Louise G. Converse.

In his forty-eight years of life J. P. Morgan has grown into a remarkable duplicate of his father. The resemblance extended to his appearance, to build and even to the tones of the voice, the characteristic way of combing the hair and of walking. The few persons who have been intimately associated with him in business have found in him his father's quick perception of men and affairs, great decisiveness, the same intolerance of fussy detail, the same grave determination to get things done by sending his son to Russia to negotiate the great bond loan which the Russian crisis compelled in the year he was appointed first secretary to the special American embassy to the coronation of King Edward and proved that he could do it.

Test Came In 1907.

The younger Morgan's test came in the panic of 1907. In the period lasting between the Harriman Standard Oil and 1907 Morgan attained to dominance in the control of the Northern Pacific the younger Morgan was a field marshal with an shouting and dancing around broker lapse, as darling and shoulder lay through crowds on the street or lip in the corridors of the Stock Exchange, everywhere, quiet, level headed and self-reliant. He was the responsible one for doubting and dispatch of the panic of 1907.

J. P. Morgan's reputation in Wall street for brilliantly expanding that of his father is well known, but he gave his characteristic own especially when he showed that there was another Morgan underneath the cold, emotionless exterior.

FAMOUS FATHER AND ABILITY

plicity of its manner toward his son and successor. The younger Morgan is a balanced confidence in himself.

Closely Associated With Father.

His symptomatic study of his father and his close association with him during the last years of the elder Morgan's life father at his greatest. He received the benefits of the fipened experience of his father's long years. His preparation for the responsibilities which he succeeded was thorough, as is the Morgan way. He college in the confidence of his family for outdoor sports. Once he was elected to membership of the athletic teams.

From college he graduated to the London house of Morgan, Grenfell & Co., the London branch of the firm's work. He had much to do with the transfer of the Alaska railroad from the government to France for the Panama canal.

It was a tremendous undertaking and delicate. The gold had to be gathered cautiously in spite of its tremendous quantity to avoid a panic, and in the upward bound of the price of exchange. Then it was transmitted America's financiers in the confidence of London bankers. It was a task that required the assurances that "young Morgan" possessed that he would make good.

Overshadowed by Older Financier.

The older Morgan came to this country from his London scheming with a reputation already made. The younger man did not start here with his father's prestige. He was in a sense in his fault because his father's personality overshadowed his own.

In 1895 his father showed his confidence in him by making him a partner. Then he was married. Then he began to show his worth, and by 1900 he was a member of the firm. He was the responsible one for doubting and dispatch of the panic of 1907.

Mr. Morgan's favorite outdoor sport, like his father's, has been yachting. He sailed his thirty-footer, the Hildegarde, in the Larchmont race week in 1911. He is a member of the Corinthian, Larchmont, Union, Automobile Brook, Century, New York Yacht, Jekyl Island Yacht, Newfoundland Corinthian Yacht and Delray clubs in New York city and the Meadow Brook and City of London clubs in London, but he has never the public appeal. His London home at 12 Grosvenor square, which he has occupied for a month or two each year, is often pointed out to visitors in London.

Interest In Public Affairs.

Though very shy of publicity, once more, like his father, he showed many public affairs. He was recently called when courthard that it was his duty to testify before the congressional committee and other public officials in New York here had been many good personal suggestions gathered out of his experience to further the act. As a witness was a letter he wrote to Deputy Comptroller Wells of the Treasury in making suggestions regarding a system operation of the subtreasury which saved consumers to the public and money to the banks. He took active part in directing the San Francisco relief work after the fire.

On Sept. 27, 1913, the state comptroller's office of New York received a check for $2,000,000 as the preliminary tax payment of the estate of J. Morgan, deceased. The state comptroller had not estimated the inheritance tax on the estate, but the amount of the payment indicated that the taxable estate valued at about $62,000,000.

The check was received from Comptroller Lindsay A. Wilmot, the attorney for the Morgan estate. It was drawn upon the banking house of J. P. Morgan & Co.

The Older Morgan's Estate.

The will of J. P. Morgan was offered for probate on April 21, 1913, in the surrogate's office in Morgan, the sum; William Fiereon Hamilton, Herbert L. Satterlee and Junius S. Morgan, who constituted approximately 11,000 words, including a short codicil. The will, drawn on Jan. 4, 1913, about three months before the death of Morgan.

There were twenty specific bequests aggregating $1,000,000, the largest to a year's salary to each employee of J. P. Morgan & Co. of London, $1,000 to Morgan & Co. of London, $1,000 to each household servant who should be provided for and a $1,000 piece of silver to each member of the firm's publicity. There were also bequests of annuities amounting to $10,000 a year.

J. P. Morgan was bequeathed $3,000,000 in trust to be left by him to his children. The third daughter, Anne Tracy Morgan, was left $1,000,000 in addition to the income of a trust fund which she will receive from her father, Junius S. Morgan. A bequest of $1,000,000 was made to Harvard College. Total bequests of $930,000 were made to the Morgan firm.

Firm at British Agents.

The activities of the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co. in the United States as agents of the allies in the purchase of war munitions have been discussed widely in recent months. The London Globe recently made investigation into the activities of the firm. The question was discussed in parliament last week on the floor of the house of commons, but it was not answered by the government, although dissatisfaction with the firm's activities was declared to be widespread. The Globe has always been bitterly hostile to American interests.

"The house of commons," the Globe says, "is entitled to a full disclosure of the terms under which J. P. Morgan has been appointed the purchasing agent of the British government in the United States. Is the commission charged with this appointment made? What is the rate of commission? Have any commissions has been paid or is due to date?

"These were the points to which an answer was sought by Mr. Hogge and Mr. Mooney, who put the questions, but the answers were not forthcoming from the minister. Mr. Asquith says he has no desire to withhold from the house of commons's services, but it would be inconvenient to answer at this time. He repeated in the house recently that Morgan keeps an account with the firm of the government at another price. This is an explanation that calls for an immediate answer."

GREAT WEIGHT OF ARMY MAIL.

Total Amount Aggregates More Than One Hundred Tons Daily.

Herbert Hoover, food commissioner and chief of Belgium, said it is impossible to realize the full weight of packages or parcels to troops at the front owing to the excessive burden that would be thrown on the transport authorities.

"The number of parcels sent daily to the expeditionary force in France has increased from 40,000 in November to 167,000 in February," he explained, "to about 200,000.

"In addition, about half a million letters in the British mail are sent to the front, the total weight of mail matter is about a hundred tons a day."

WATER WAGON TOUR WAS HERE

Rail Splitter Quartet Sings War Time Songs. Stop on Tour to the Pacific Coast. Good Audience for Noon Meeting.

Patriotism and Prohibition vied with each other for the supremacy in the meeting held in the Lutheran church on Monday, by Jay Russell and the Rail Splitter Quartet on their way from the coast over the Lincoln Highway in the first "water wagon" tour.

As a fitting introduction to the program Dr. Russell flung out a flag, the audience rose to attention and sang "America", and then he plunged into the subject of the campaign which has prompted this most ambitious and unusual tour for the cause of temperance.

Dr. Russell characterized the Lincoln Highway as the most worthy and most tremendous memorial to an individual ever attempted and far more significant than the usual monumental building now being erected in Washington as national shrines. He dwelt at length upon Lincoln's shrewd sagacity and quoted his oft-repeated remark that he could never lose his right hand than sign the Emancipation Proclamation were reversing.

He spoke of Lincoln's stern fight for the total elimination of how he circulated pledges in the small Illinois communities and in the next seven years the number of persons signing this pledge had increased until the number has reached the amazing total of 3,500,000, of this number 250,000 were secured on the late World's Temperance Sunday.

Calling attention to the numerous accidents caused through automobile drivers being under the influence of liquor, Dr. Russell made the statement that, if there were no other reason for national prohibition, the cost of the automobile should be sufficient. When this highway is built, he said, "we will be a united nation." He then went on to tell the details of carrying on the enterprise.

Beginning this fall, large prohibition posters will be exhibited all over the route from coast to coast, the posters being changed every week. Each week a booklet will be issued by the Sunday School to millions of children, with the hope who are not regular church attendants.

"See This Thing Through" is the slogan of the campaign, which is the "Five Year War" for the passage of the Sheppard Prohibition Amendment and Dr. Russell outlined at length the various agencies to be brought into play to accomplish the desired end.

The meeting was largely attended and highly enthusiastic. Dr. Russell stated that he only stopped in the cities at a time and then the Rail Splitter Quartet, composed of Ohio Wesleyan University students would sing no appropriate song. They have remarkably melodious voices and rendered beautifully in the war time songs and the other patriotic airs which they sang, all in all it was one of the best and most successful temperance meetings held in Gettysburg for a long while.

HAVE MANY TROUBLES

Parasite Show Pests Abound in Farms of State.

Judging from reports received at the State Capitol, this is an extraordinary year for the pests that prey on the farm and in the orchard and that, so far, it seems as though corn will be the only crop that will escape chinch or bug.

The corn acreage this year is the greatest in many years, being 102 to 100 per cent in area sown, as compared with the crop of the last ten years. No pest has yet been reported in the corn fields.

What has been afflicted by the Hessian fly, the pears and apples by the fire blight, the apricots by the woolly aphis, the rest of the fruits by the red spider mite, the peaches by a destructive borer. Various bugs also are reported as destroying vegetables, while the potatoes are confronted with the blight and the familiar Colorado potato beetle. The State officials say Pennsylvania will have big crops.

BARN DESTROYED IN EARLY BLAZE

Fire about half past three o'clock Saturday morning entirely destroyed the barn, hog pen, and chicken coop on the farm of Edward W. Schriver, in Butler township, between Arendtsville and Biglerville. With the building there burned one horse, a calf, several hogs, two loads of new wheat, three loads of new hay, and a quantity of hay from last year, nearly all of the farming implements, one wagon, a large quantity of harness, and other things too many to enumerate here. Mr. Schriver carried insurance on the barn in the Adams County Mutual Company for $1,000, and he has Scouttown at $5000.

No tangible theory is held as to the cause of the blaze. John Hess, father-in-law of Mr. Schriver, was at the barn about seven o'clock and left at that time for the curb market at Gettysburg. Everything was all right apparently when he started for town and the lantern he used was found hanging on a post some distance from the barn after the fire was discovered so that it could not have caused the trouble.

The first that was known of the blaze was when Mr. Schriver was awakened by a sound as of an explosion at the barn. He looked out of the window and saw flames bursting from every side of the structure. An extensible party passing along another county road saw the sudden burst of light, and the upper portion of the interior of the building was evidently on fire when it was first seen.

Mr. Schriver, without waiting to put on additional clothing, ran to the scene in an effort to save the horse that was in the barn. He tripped over a wheelbarrow and fell heavily, but picked himself up, and, finding the horse already down, dragged his carcass to a point where it could be got out of his automobiles. His hands were terribly burned while at this work and he was forced to stop. His two sons finished the task and got the machine to a place of safety with little damaged having been done to it. The car was a five passenger Ford. Mr. Schriver's other machine was in Arendtsville at the time.

The fire burned so rapidly that nothing else could be saved and successful efforts were made to save the other outbuildings.

A physician was summoned, while the fire was at its height, to attend to Mr. Schriver's burns and the unfortunate man suffered greatly until remedies were applied.

The farm was for many years known as the old Fisher place. About twenty years ago it was bought by Jacob Schriver, father of Edward Schriver, who sold the place five years ago to his son. The barn, while not a new one, was of substantial construction, and the loss is a heavy one. Insurance was carried on the crops of stock and a more serious loss was averted inasmuch nearly all the horses and cattle being in the fields during the night.

MANY SHATTERED CAREERS IN THE WAKE OF HARRY THAW'S TROUBLES

"I there a Thaw jinx?

Is there some subtle and mysterious influence which pervades the atmosphere about Harry K. Thaw and his affairs, which brings with him ever a relation to the misfortunes of life? asks the New York World.

The question has been called up by the fact that Evelyn Nesbit Thaw, ex-wife of Harry K. Thaw, who has made a wider study of the Thaw case than any other man in the attorney general's office, and who devoted most of his time for the last two years to an effort to get Thaw back to Matteawan, to take up cudgels for the last proceedings before Justice Hendrick.

At last reports Mr. Kennedy was in Buffalo recovering from a nervous breakdown, which overtook him soon after the conclusion of Thaw's conspiracy trial last March.

Not long after the beginning of the conspiracy trial Mr. Kennedy's friends began to see signs of nervousness on his part. They became more and more pronounced until after one of the arguments before the appellate division Attorney General Woodbridge rose for him and advised him to take a complete rest. Kennedy was in a way without meeting word of his destination escape. Acting on this advice, Thaw testified that he engaged the men who assaulted him in his getaway. Of course the conspiracy fell as if $10,000 to bring about suit against Mr. Hurley. Mr. Hurley and Mr. Andot claimed he had expended in behalf of Thaw.

In the course of the trial evidence was brought out that Mr. Hurley, a young lawyer, who acted as Thaw's representative in Canada, had paid $250 to brought suit against Mr. Hurley for $10,000 damages. Mr. Andot claimed he had expended in behalf of Thaw.

One of those whose downfall is directly attributable to his connection with Thaw is Clifford W. Hartridge, a young lawyer, who acted as Thaw's representative in Canada. He was disbarred in 1906 for bringing suit against Mr. Hurley. Mr. Andot, Mr. Hurley's counsel, disclaimed he had expended in behalf of Thaw.

In the course of the trial evidence was brought out that Mr. Hurley had been expended in keeping a number of women friends of Thaw out of the way. Hartridge lost the suit. At the conclusion of the trial Justice Hendrick directed that an investigation be made to determine whether or not Hartridge had been guilty of obstruction of justice. Hartridge was brought before the appellate division to declare contempt proceedings brought by the bar association.

Mrs. Hartridge Dies.

Even more tragic than the fate of Hartridge was that of his wife. In October, 1907, the lawyer called at the headquarters, and reported that his wife, Beatrice, had disappeared. A search was immediately begun which included the morgues of a dozen cities. It was suspected for a time that she had committed suicide. Then the following July a woman died in the Homeopathic hospital in Pittsburgh. Under this afterward learned, was Mrs. Hartridge. It then developed that almost from the day of her disappearance she had been living at Pittsburgh, where she had gone to avoid the publicity which she knew she was to suffer from a divorce.

Another lawyer who has figured in grave difficulties with Thaw is John X. Andot, who went to New York city from Middleton after court had term three as a state senator. He was admitted to the New York bar. Up to that time no breath of scandal had ever attached itself to his name, and he was first building up a circle of friends such as are the envy of the young lawyer.

He went to live at a hotel in White Plains, N. Y., where he was at the same time as Thaw's mother. Thaw's own sworn testimony on this point may be relied on. Andot and Thaw were soon on a most friendly basis, known as a magazine writer. Lewis became interested in Thaw while the latter was in Matteawan, and subsequently became engaged in a publicity campaign in his behalf.

On one of the visits which he made to the asylum he advised the man in whose behalf he was working. In

Something like forty million barrels of beer are brewed in the United Kingdom every year. Of these, fewer than one thousand are exported.

BIGLERVILLE HAS LARGE RESERVOIR

Capacity of almost Two Million Gallons in Container recently Completed. Modern Construction Methods were Used.

Biglerville's new water reservoir has been completed and is now in active service, providing that town with excellent water and in ample quantity. The original facilities were found to be insufficient to relieve the town even in case of fire at a time of long continued drought and the extra size reservoir was considered necessary to meet upon.

The new container is located on Yellow Hill and is of thoroughly modern construction. It is built of Lehigh Portland cement, re-inforced with iron and steel. The reservoir is 23 feet long and 171 feet wide within the depth at the breast is sixteen feet. This provides a capacity of 1,800,000 gallons.

The average gravity flow is 94,000 gallons per day and the fall is sufficient to provide Biglerville with ample fire protection without the use of steam or automobile engine.

The reservoir is owned and operated by the Biglerville Water Company which serves the town with water mains throughout the town and for a time is operated with a smaller reservoir satisfactorily. The demand for fire service increased, however, and the fall in water pressure during hot, long dry seasons made a larger container necessary and when the new reservoir was determined upon it was also decided to make it a matter of pride both to the company and the community which it serves.

Paul G. Hartman, formerly of Littlestown, is the defendant in a case docketed for trial in Lancaster County Court. The prosecutor is Mrs. Belle C. Ramsey, of Hooper Brook.

The allegations are that the accused wrote on a package which was sent to Mrs. Catherine Witman, of Churchtown, words to the effect that G. I. Hartman, Roneys, Pa., was the name of the prosecutor, was an embezzler of funds belonging to the bank and guilty of the charge in the United States district court, Philadelphia.

Mrs. Witman was paid $100 by the bank, which sum she alleged had been misappropriated by the cashier and the check, Hartman wrote on it "for claim in full for embezzlement held against Mr. Hartman." Bail was filed for which Mrs. Ramsey seeks to recover.

The case has upset the western portion of Chester county and the adjoining section of Lancaster county, as Philadelphia "North American."

I will allow no display of temper on the officers under me, and will promptly punish any breach of discretion on the part of the borough police.

On the other hand the preservation of peace and order requires that the officers of the law be treated with respect, and to publicly subject the policemen to abuse and insult by citizens can have no other effect than to lower the efficiency of the officers and thereby endanger the peace and safety of the Borough.

For the reason I have instructed the officers to arrest all persons who publicly curse and ridicule them while on duty, and to bring the offenders before me on the charge of disturbing the peace.

J. W. EICHOLTZ, Burgess.

During Mr. Emmons' suspension, Officer Bingham will act as chief, and A. V. Weikert will be the night officer.

SEEK TO RECOVER ELECTION MONEY

County's Effort to Get from the State Money for Primary of Two Years Ago was Argued Tuesday at Harrisburg.

Argument was had in Dauphin county Court, next to Harrisburg, for Adams County the sum of $2932.-02 due from the State for the primary election expense of 1913. The application at issue is of interest and importance to every county in Pennsylvania, as it does, a question which has never yet been decided.

Some years ago a State-aid highway was constructed in Straban township over Hunterstown, the cost of which was something over $30,000. Of this, Adams County paid its share of $15,000 and Straban paid a portion of its share which was the same. The State paid a half of the full amount.

The primary election expenses of 1913 were advanced by Adams County to be re-paid by the State. The Auditor General drew an order on the State Treasury in favor of Adams County for this amount, but State Treasurer R. K. Young refused to pay it and applied the amount on the Straban township account.

Some time ago Adams County instituted proceedings in the Dauphin County Court to compel State Treasurer Young to pay to this county these election expenses. The case was argued Tuesday before the Dauphin County Court. It is the first time the matter, which is to be decided under the interpretation of the Sproul act of 1911, has come before the courts, and every county in the State has a keen interest in it.

Attorney General Francis S. Brown will represent the State Treasurer, and Adams County will be represented by J. Donald Swope, Esq., county solicitor, and by John D. Keith, Esq., special counsel.

A SHREWD WOMAN

By EUNICE BLAKE

Martin Kempfer was a mountaineer in the Swiss Alps. He owned a number of goats and made cheese of their milk. One day when Nordia was visiting a neighbor Kempfer thought he came to a mess log on his back in a deep condition, for he had slipped and fallen over a cliff. Martin stood on the brink of the precipice for a minute and otherwise cursed the sufferer and then hurried down to the foot of the cliff to inspect the matter.

Martin's wife, Gretchen, was a very shrewd woman, and, before doing anything of importance he was used to consulting her. She was a widow and sold her of his experience and that he was the wisest man in that day today he had left on the mountain side might be buried.

"Think you say anything about it?" said Gretchen. "You might be accused of having committed a murder."

Martin had thought of that himself, and this was one reason why he had hurried down to the foot of the cliff. He concluded to keep his mouth shut. But there were two things he did not think of. In narrating the stranger he had met on the mountain he had when descending the mountain he had met Jacob Schreiner going up. Schreiner found the body and in telling of his discovery mentioned that Kempfer coming down the mountain. This attracted the attention that Kempfer had been the cause of the stranger's death, and a man was sent to the scene to investigate. Kempfer received him, but he had forgotten to change his shirt sleeve that soaked the blood.

He makes a long story short. Kempfer not having reported the stranger's death had his trial for his life. He was tried for murder and convicted, to be sentenced on a Friday at the hour of 12 noon.

Gretchen, his wife, was horror-stricken at the result of the advice she had given her husband, but she secured the comfort her by saying that if he had been convicted the jury would not have been convicted. The misfortune was finding the stranger's body. Otherwise, as has been said, was a woman of shrewd judgment, and she set about how to think of some plan whereby she might save her husband.

She went to Adolph Switzer, the headsman of the city prison, and made him up to save her husband, assuring him that it would be that he did not have the blood on his axe. If any one, that should be possible to save Kempfer from the scaffold was a matter for the courts, over which he had no power, yet he agreed to make the attempt.

One morning some time before the hour for execution Switzer was found dressed of a pain by which she might be taken to Kempfer's cell. Gretchen, though, she did not consider it likely that she would be able to see her husband in. At any rate she determined to try it.

Her husband had, among other things, a chronometer which had been given him by a watchmaker in Geneva and which he valued highly. Indeed, he secured the time once a month regularly and kept that he will never wind it more than a few seconds. The result was that Martin Kempfer was the first the whole valley. The day before the hanging he asked the guard to attend to go to Grenzberg and get the time, that he might be sure to have exactly the right one to exact accordance with the noon-day gun. This gave the guard a pretext to afternoon minutes behind what was correct, stating that the watch was that owing to bad weather the astronomer had been unable to observe and had been unable to do so for several weeks and had been compelled to guess more or less in his chronometers. The sheriff sent the watch to accordance with the time given him.

On the morning of the hanging Gretchen went to the head man of the canton and asked him to permit her to see the body of her husband that she might take it home for interment. Of course it would give her the order after the execution, but she begged him to do it before. Half an hour before 12 she went to his house and met Adolph Switzer, which she set ahead fifteen minutes, and when the hand struck 12 Adolph Switzer signed the order. Gretchen had a horse and a cart in waiting, and, jumping into the cart, she drove to the house, and, jumping into the cart, she drove to the prison, the guard conveying a mile to the jail. On the way she turned the hands of her chronometer forward to correspond with the time she had set ahead of the jail. She had instructed him he and her themselves both assisted around the waist makes a neat band, and is fitted with a shaped yoke.

Sizes 4, 6, 8, 10, 12 and 14 years. Price 15 cents.

Martin Kempfer was in a condition to be executed. Gretchen had brought about between the time of the execution and the sheriff was not discovered till an hour after that fixed for the execution and when the convicted man was well on his way to foreign territory. As soon as the truth was known a conference was held by the authorities, but nothing was ever done about the matter, for when they learned that Kempfer was in a foreign land they did not try to get him, and Gretchen, who had accomplished that, he was an innocent man. Then he returned to his home.

TO PROTECT GAME AND FORESTS

Co-Operate to Save Fish and Birds while Taking Care of Woodlands in this and Other Counties of the State. New Plan.

The representatives in Adams County of the State Forestry Department and the State Game and Fisheries commissions will unite to protect the birds in this county from forest fires and the streams and woods in this section from illegal trapping.

This decision was reached concerning all the counties of the State in an agreement whereby the wardens, rangers and other men of the field forces of the three branches of the State Government will co-operate in enforcement of the laws relative to those services and there will be no conflict of authority.

Under the act recently placed on the statute books, the men of the three services were directed to cooperate in enforcement of the various laws, but a question arose as to whether game wardens, who are part of the hunters' license revenue, which is specifically appropriated, could be assigned by other departments.

At a conference held by Walter L. Kuhn, Deputy Attorney General, an interpretation of the code whereby the field men will perform services independently for other branches. In this way, the field force practically is tripled and arrests for violation of any law can be made by an officer and the action sent to the proper office for prosecution in the courts.

In case of fires in forests, all field men may be called in to help or when fish parties are at work men of the two other services will assist in woods.

A RUTHLESS CZAR

Peter the Great Was a Savage, but He Made His Country.

BIRTH OF MODERN RUSSIA.

It Began With a Beard Reform in Which the Moscowite Himself Acted as Razor Carrier For the Unwilling—Triumphs of the Giant Barbarian.

The other nobles of Russia, summoned from all quarters of the empire to visit St. Petersburg, sat around a table to the tune of cannon at Moscow. There were a round hundred of them there, hanging heads and shifting their weight with their dirty bejeweled bodies wearily on their uncomfortable chairs.

At the tables head stood a thick set young man of 25. He had the haughtiest poise not oddly on his giant body. He was cropped of face and was the only beardless member of the conference. His cheeks and head had been leveled a pair of barber shears.

The man was Peter I., czar of all the Russias, father of modern Russia and founder of the city of St. Petersburg. He had just returned from a tour of Europe in which he had not tasted water for a season. He had taught him, he said to the nobles, that he must have military and primitive resin that was about to succumb and leave behind the barbaric Russia had slumbered while all the west of the world had progressed.

He announced that he was going to be a savage and a civilized savage at the same time and moderns it and make it so. He also announced that he was going to shave off the beards of the nobles, laughing at it. He further informed the astonished nobles that he would be going to beat them and then. Modern Russia, he told them, was not even a mean shaggy boards and long robes, a barbarous land. It must become like the west by the Russians, and beards must go.

To show he was in earnest Peter bent over and with his own hand cut off the beard of every man there. The seventeenth century Russians the beard was as much a part of the man as his stomach and nothing but Peters iron authority, backed by the knout, could have effected a wholesale revolution. Until Peters time it had been the custom to wear the nonbeaters at least a foot longer than the rest. The beard must be ordered cut off to conform with Russian fashion. Many of the old nobles and beard reform stirred up a dozen bet like themselves.

And thus modern Russia was born. It was a Russia that would be and made his fortunes by forcibly dragging it out of the darkness of the middle ages. Not Worth Writing.

Only Safe Kisses.

To make kissing perfectly safe, the secretary of the American Social Hygiene association recommends three precautions: Cut out a square of linen or paper, dive it a bath in an antiseptic solution and place it over your mouth. This solution will prevent the kiss doing you harm provided you don't wear out the paper or bread thereby.

BEDOUIN WOMEN.

Time seemed to turn back twenty centuries when I stepped off the Tigris river steamer at Baghdad. Old Testament men in turbans, sandals and flowing robes ("abbas") crowded about, calling out in their "Ya!" and "Aiwa!" Joseph and Moses. From the direction of the mud ovens wafted away, grew the spiciest, earthiest on their shoulders and jars of water—the same style of jars no doubt that held the water when I was a boy. Even the sheep are quite so until a row, and the camels are the same.

With their own shapely hands Arab women bake the bread for the family, whose household skill would not fail to put to shame the average housewife in the United States. Over an open charcoal fire they bake their thin cakes and the cheese and meat to be eaten with them. Where there is no meat or cheese, the bread is not even leavened with yeast. Instead of a pan the dough is kneaded on a round piece of tin.

For all the average Arab women knows of America, she might as well live on the moon. Very few have heard both the story, indeed the if I compare them. Once on this ancient plain, however, they were familiar with scenes of titan—whose names and fame come to the ends of the earth.—National Geographic Magazine.

CALL OF THE SEA.

Land Is Existence, but the Ocean Are Is Life Itself.

From the down of time, humanity has been drawn to the sea by a call of its own, but water is life. The open sea is the open road. The oceans are an illusion.

Ships are the only things that are progressive views. It is from land to water, from water to other water. From the Nile to the Euphrates, from the Euphrates and the Nile, and the civilizations upon their banks, through the centuries to the civilizations of the histories. But once the sea has been crossed, and once have the civilizations of the rivers sun into the sea, the roaming mind has gone and Rome make into life. Then the sea is the road to the unknown and the queerest, you have Prance and Germany and Russia.

Supposes back there in the long ago a man stood on the shore at the mouths of the Euphrates and the Nile. Behind him were the lands. Before him rest on overland route to the southern Mediterranean. Behind him was the rising thicker further search another sword and spear. Before him was the sea. Suppose that there after all overland routes to the south were closed. Suppose, 47, with long lines of oceans. If the desert-bound Arab were cut off from the Euphrates and the strong type of the Mediterranean from the Nile, or if, in the second case, the near, stolid, contemplative government that is the pride of England never loosened its grip on the Nile and the emotional system that is the pride of France never left the Rhine, the Danube upon whose lands would the biome be built? Upon those on the outside, upon those that were cut off from land and driven to upon those that left it there?—From "The Seven Seas," by Beyond," by Edwin Davies Schoonmaker.

Her Thoughtfulness.

"George," said Mrs. Dorcelle who had come downstairs in time to hear the end of the quarrel, "is the car with you this morning. Aren't you going?"

"Very glad, indeed, lovey. It's an awful bore to walk and should get up early for the purpose of making it necessary to walk three dismal three blocks alone. How much do you want?—Exchange.

Dr. Johnson's Homeliness.

Boswell admitted Johnson himself—and this is a quality rarely found in "piety, but he was not a man who had any moral appearance. Dr. Burney tells us that he was slovenly, and Miss Burney was examining his portrait by Reynolds, which represents him in a ludicrous half length, exclaimed: "Ah, no, Reynolds, I see then—and not ugly one then eat!"—London Times.

Mechanical Riddles.

Engineers say that among the things that will never be settled are the following: Whether a cat's tail or its cerebrum is better than a short one of the same length; whether a cat can run faster at night than they do in the day; when a great deal of time has been spent which side of the belt should run next the pulley, and the right way to buy belts.—London Express.

WHY SHOULD WOMEN VOTE?

WOMAN'S RUFFRAGE FROM THE VIEWPOINT OF A LEADING FARMERS.

Why should women vote? That is the question I get in replies from seven to seven and reverberating from the Atlantic seaboard to the Mexican border. It is the mission of a newspaper to print the news and the action of the Texas Farmers Union in its relation to woman's suffrage that question was recently before the Texas legislature is significant as representing the attitude of the organized farmers. The following expert the agreement presented by Hon. W. D. Lewis, president of the Texas Farmers' Union, in opposing the bill:

"It is gratifying to note that it is not the farmer's wife who is clamoring for the ballot. She has been busy trying to make happier homes, molding the minds of future citizens and sharing with her husband the cares and the legitimate pleasures of life. The ballot will give her no relief from these duties, give no assistance in clothing the children or in the home additional comforts, conveniences or entertainment. It is a fact, that the city woman promoted to idleness by prosperity, who has failed in the unfrequent movement.

"From the broad standpoint, perhaps a woman has as much right to vote as a man, but she has as much right to plow as a man; she has as much right to work in the harvest field as he has as much right to shoulder a musket as a soldier, but the average soldier who would not do so from choice or from the compulsion of civilized couples her to earn a living by employment, which prevents her from not consider unfortunate a qualification. The right to vote does not confer a reason for granting franchise. It is the exercise of the right at the ballot box the sense as we are opposed to the right to work in the factory or in the army and for the same reasons. We do not consider her plant flowers than now whose; she has not the physical strength for rear children than raise political issues. Although she has as much right to do one as the other.

Opposed to Unceasing Humanity.

"Set qualification for suffrage may be fixed by the legislature. Mr. Rogers' natural rule adjusts itself portfully to the conditions. It is a fact that argument advanced by the proponents of woman's suffrage that the educated and noble women are far more capable of exercising the suffrage are strictly than a worthless negro, but the fact remains that the latter is the nearer suffrage, and while culture and refinement have their influence as desirable virtues, they are not the qualifications that fit one for suffrage.

"The primary, inherent and inseparable right of suffrage is the support ing a family. The plow handle, the hoe handle and the ax handle are the first experience necessary to properly vote for the office of governor. A great big business and civilization rests on the shoulders of the average woman the home and man the business and the state.

"There has been much foolish legislation enacted because of the fact that it made that no doubt appeals to woman's heart and sympathies, but in undertake to assess the human race by law we must consider legislative folly and a tragedy to mankind.

"We are opposed to the equal rights of woman's ward upon the ground that we main our superior. We consider woman's sphere as high and holy as the yellow part of Twentieth Century civilization.

"Woman is the medium through which God has chosen to bless mankind; it is her hand that plants the seeds of love, truth and purity and it is through her heart that hope, love and virtue have their birth in the human mind. Christ—the liberator of womankind—was satisfied to teach the lessons of life and He was a man. He chose from one of human hearts and refused worldly power and men followed after Him, women were His slaves. His little children climbed upon His knees and the Ruler of the universe was not what in Him He was well pleased the woman find a higher calling?"

CARRANZA SEEKS U. S. RECOGNITION

Will Establish Government Deserving Support.

Vera Cruz, July 16—Asserting that the Constitutionalists are trying to establish in Mexico a government along the lines advocated by Thomas Jefferson, and declaring President Wilson's son to Jefferson, Venustiano Carranza, first chief of the Constitutionalists, has given an extended interview, that is regarded as a bid for recognition by the United States.

Carranza pointed to the constitution of Mexico as the basis for the Constitutionalists and his plan for an orderly administration of affairs as the basis for American support.

"We feel that we are entitled to the sympathy of the American government," he said, "and we intend to do," said Carranza. "We have such faith in the disinterested purpose of President Wilson and so that we are confident he will give to the Constitutionalists will be forthcoming at the earliest moment. Everything possible will be done to transform Mexico City into a peaceful, orderly and businesslike community."

General Carranza said that he does not believe that the present congress, congressmen, that he would make a report to the congress, and that the congress would issue a call for an election of a president to succeed the provisional government. The new government, he added, would grant amnesty to all persons except those guilty of crime.

FIREMEN ASK COUNTY MONEY

Feel that Commissioners should Pay toward Apparatus to Protect Alms House and Jail. Make Formal Request.

Allen B. Plank and C. Wm. Bealer appeared before the county commissioners on Tuesday, as their regular weekly meeting, to ask a substantial appropriation toward the purchase of a new automobile fire fighting apparatus for Straban township.

It was pointed out that the county owns thousands of dollars worth of property which will be affected the most through fire protection if the plan carries, and the great value such protection would be to the County Home, the Court House and the Jail was all clearly outlined. It is felt by the company, and the others interested, that the county's subscription should be one of the largest on the list.

The commissioners agreed to take the matter under advisement. They stated that they would make a subscription to the fund but did not indicate what the amount would be.

The work of soliciting funds has been going along quietly. Mr. Plank, who has the matter in charge, declares to get the gifts from the larger contributors first, before going to those from whom not so much may be expected. The college and seminary are both most liberal and the work will rume in order that their extensive holdings may be given protection. The town council and school board are expected to contribute liberally.

The banks will be asked, the councils of the various boroughs, the manufacturing plants, business houses, hotels, and private individuals, until it is believed that a sufficient large sum will be secured to make possible the purchase of an apparatus which will meet all local needs and supply the town with protection sufficient for many years to come.

McATEE MAY GO

Derr Likely to Umpire in Blue Ridge League.

President Soyer is considering the signing of Luther Derr, former umpire of the C. & G. C. League, as an arbiter in this circuit. He made his first appearance in Blue Ridge circles Tuesday at Martinsburg where he umpired in conjunction with McAtee. This will not mean that he will be signed. President Soyer is giving him a trial to determine whether he is capable of holding down a place in this circuit.

Derr gave satisfaction in the C. & G. C. circuit and should have no difficulty in making good here. Umpire McAtee has not been doing very good work lately and it is likely that he will be given his release. Several teams of the league have registered kicks against Mac and it is likely that he will be the one to go. The change of umps will be made in a few days.

SUCCESSFUL PICNICS

Over Twelve Hundred Dollars Received at One of Them.

The annual picnic of St. Mary's Catholic church, McSherrystown, was held at Wiesner's Grove on Saturday and was a great success in every respect. Preparations had been made very carefully by the committee in charge under the able leadership of Vincent Little. The citizens of McSherrystown, who prize to the picnic held yearly under the auspices of this church, also donated 650 pounds of chicken as well as 100 cakes. The proceeds of the picnic were $1,222.67, which will be applied to the parish debt of $13,800.

It is said that $250 was cleared at the Bonnaauville picnic on Saturday.

REPORTS ON THE THURMONT WRECK

Find that One Man had too Much to Do, and that Block System should be Extended. Public Service Commission Report.

After an investigation of the recent head-on collision on the Western Maryland Railway, near Thurmont, in which several lives were lost, Chief Engineer Charles E. Phelps, of the Public Service Commission, on Wednesday submitted to the commission a report of the investigation, accompanied with two recommendations:

1. That the Western Maryland Railway Company proceed to equip its lines with automatic block system so that operations will be so controlled between the junction of Emory and double tracks at Emory Grove and Virginia avenue, Cumberland; and

2. Pending the equipment of the line with block signals that the train dispatcher be relieved of the duty of picking up and placing meeting orders along the line under control; that his time be devoted solely to controlling the movement of trains on the line.

These recommendations were based upon an investigation of the collision on May 6, and subsequent visits of inspectors of the commission, and investigation by them of the cause of the accident. Mr. Phelps says among other things:

"It appears that the train dispatching over 180 miles of line, which was formerly handled from Hagerstown, Shelton, Baltimore, and from Hagerstown, was at the time of the accident, handled from Hagerstown, in addition to his regular duties of controlling the movement of trains over these 180 miles, the dispatcher is also charged with the duty of distributing empty freight cars as and when required.

"It would seem that this duty best naturally impaired the efficiency of the train dispatcher at this point, as particular passenger trains involved in this accident were concerned, and it would also seem that it was too much to expect that one dispatcher for 180 miles of line should be in position to give his undivided attention to the correct conduct movements and not to have some other important duty which would tend to impair the effectiveness of his real duties as a train dispatcher."

START MOVEMENT TO REMOVE TOLL

Serious that Charges be Removed from Reeds Leading to Gettysburg. Specially Concerned about Lincoln Highway Routes.

In order to clear the toll roads which connect with the main highways to Gettysburg through York, the Pennsylvania Free Highway League is starting an active campaign to arouse the interest of the State Department locally. The principal activity is to be the freeing of the route of the Lincoln Highway west of Wrightsville.

York business men cannot see how the powers that be can overlook the Lincoln highway and distribute the $200,000 appropriation entirely to other sections of the state, and they have started agitation that promises some results. They do not expect to get much of a slice, for $250,000 will be required to buy the accursed list of toll roads, but a little bit, if divided to the Lincoln highway, would help out a lot. Even a measurement count would be something, and they are hopeful to hope for more to come in the near future. Hence the action now started.

It is pointed out that although the Lincoln highway passes through the county seat, it does not pass through the centre of York city and that the highway is not properly advertised all over the country, tourists who make Gettysburg their objective point, and who come from the west, due to the Panama exposition, take the Lincoln highway, but when approaching that city the city of York a wide detour is made over a road that enters that city in a toll road.

Some tourists from New York, Philadelphia, Reading and vicinity take advantage of the Maryland good roads when they want to come to Gettysburg and go farther west, and they skip the city of York.

They can run comfortably from Philadelphia to Chester, to Wilmington, to Elkton, to Perryville, to Havre de Grace, Churchville, Belair, Kirkville, Baltimore, Catonsville, Ridgeley City, West Hanover, Harrisburg, Wrightsville, Westminster, Taneytown, and down to Gettysburg. Through all of the Maryland territory above mentioned there is no detour. It is rather a long way round to get from Philadelphia to Gettysburg, but by going it pays to go that route. Tourists prefer the longer journey with comfort rather than the shorter one through York with its discomforts and its constant tolls.

One of the big points of attack soon to be made, it is said, is the railroad bridge at Wrightsville. Over which all are to be made to secure a substantial reduction.

TO BUILD THIRTY NEW 100 Undersea Craft.

United States Soon to Have PRESIDENT FAVORS PLANS.

Naval Needs in Act Comprises For Appropriation to Construct the Most Efficient Submersibles in the World—Navy Already Over Congestion and Seventy in Service.

The most imposing program for increasing the country's naval defenses that matter has yet come before the member of submarines, approximately for the next session of congress, Press officials. In close touch with the plans for the navy it was learned that at least thirty and probably more submarines certainly would be authorized.

Some naval officers of high rank who have studied the matter think that as soon as fifty or seventy-five submarines would not be too many. The last will be given to three months authorized years ago, which will bring the total to 58. The United States has a total now of seventy seven if its recommendations are followed. Only two years the total, it is estimated, may be brought up to the above mentioned craft.

Secretary Daniels, it is understood, favors a large building program, believing that it is the best means to the efficiency of the submarining arm into the most important unit of the navy. The action of the last congress in appropriating for only three additional marines when only eight or nine were built in a year has left the navy and the secretary confidence that the service of the country would be served more economically in its grant for the underwater craft.

President's Approval.

President Wilson is understood to favor an extraordinary large program for the construction of submarines next year.

Information is being gathered rapidly abroad by the experts of the navy bureau of construction as to the recent improvements in the underwater boats in the European war. Many of the progress committee have been able to minimize the submarine menace by the ingenuous of their development of heavier guns and more powerful engines.

Experiments are being conducted by the navy for the purpose of enabling submarines to fire with increased accuracy. It is believed that when the general bound is reached it will be possible to accurately hit a number of submarines recommended above the surface and engines that can be supplied.

Disappearing Guns.

Greater efficiency than has been developed by the submarine will be undoubtedly predicted by high naval officers for the construction of the result of the new batteries. Already Secretary Daniels has announced that all submarines built will be equipped with disappearing guns, mounted flush on the surface action. A school devoted to building models of these guns and courses for submarines now is in operation at Newport.

While the development of the submarine is being worked out for the two super-Dreadnoughts provided for by the last congress will be designed pending the results of experiments with the submarine gun and its ancillary torpedoes. Secretary Daniels has declared that he will not allow any of the interest of construction and repair work—interests which are powerful in many states, being arranged subsoons to sap the efficiency of the navy.

The thickness of armor necessary to protect the vitals of the modern battleships and the amount of belt subtracted from the weight of guns and other her bottom has been torn open by the explosion of a mine or torpedo upon which navy officers are working hard.

VINGS BIRD WITH GOLF BALL

George Cook Webb, son of a St. Joseph (Mo.) banker, knocked a bird on the limb of the country club that drive with his golf ball, but the bird flew off. Mr. Webb drove from the fifth tee. The ball sailed through the air for 200 yards and then struck a red headed woodpecker. The bird fell to the ground, apparently dead. Mr. Webb climbed after it and killed the bird on the wing with his ball.

The golfers continued playing, and Mr. Webb was preparing to drive to the next hole when the bird began to show signs of returning to consciousness. Webb stopped to drive to the next hole and then he turned to see what was causing the woodpecker to act so. The bird had carried a long lead between its wings, apparently dazed by the blow from the golf ball, and with a quarter of an inch protruding.

WHITE HEADS IN THE NEW COMMISSION

Adams County Farmers Interested in First Meeting of Farm Advisers. Will Make General Survey in Order to Arrange Work.

Governor Brumbaugh on Friday outlined to the new State Commission of Agriculture his policies for the advancement of agriculture in Pennsylvania and called attention to the commissioners to make "an agricultural survey," of the State so that they can have a knowledge of the opportunities to increase the food supply.

He suggested that there be some new examination of the Department of Agriculture to undertaken the commission, ers should work with the details of its work and the reasons for the increase which have been created from time to time; that the relation of State College to the department be studied; that the agricultural branches of Pennsylvania should be thoroughly studied and plans worked out for discussion at frequent conferences, which, the Governor said, he would attend.

The commission elected H. V. White, of Philadelphia, as chairman, but the Governor said that he was not ready to announce immediately the Secretary of Agriculture, who is to be the executive officer of the commission. He has several days to serve, he said, but considered the study of the agricultural situation more important than appointments.

"I intend to sit with the commission and to have the members meet often to travels about the state and to talk them up there and to consider all the plans just as I have been doing with the Highway Department. I consider that there is no politics in this commission, but it must work out the problems of agriculture together and discuss concrete propositions for helping our agriculture.

The Governor gave no intimation as to whom he would name for secretary or when he would appoint the commission. Secretary Critchfield will act for the commission until the permanent secretary work to be done not much in the way of appointments can be expected this month at least.

Trees were uprooted, buildings unroofed, telephone and telegraph lines were torn down and considerable damage to crops was accompanied the wind and at places hail fell in torrents. The storm covered a strip about a mile wide by 20 miles long. Vivid flashes of lightning added to the storm's terror.

Verses Muenter Wrote on "When I Am Dead"

Among the effects of Erich Muenter, the Dodds Hill, Chelsea (Mass.) disciple of Kaiserism, who killed Mrs. Edward Preston Ives and shot himself to death in the office of J. P. Morgan & Co., in New York, in 1916, Several verses by him were found.

They were written on the inside of each of a full dozen envelopes, and addressed to Mrs. Muenter. The verses follow:

When I am dead
And all my deeds are known,
I would like to be remembered
As one who loved his own.

When I am dead
And all my sins are told,
I would like to be remembered
As one who loved his fold.

When I am dead
And all my debts are paid,
I would like to be remembered
As one who loved his trade.

When I am dead
And all my days are done,
I would like to be remembered
As one who loved his home.

VANISHING GUNS FOR AMERICAN SUBMARINES.

Officials Reveal Plans After It Was Found That Germany Had Secret.

The navy department has just announced that disappearing submarine guns will be mounted on all American submarines.

It developed that American naval experts secretly have been working on the submarine gun for more than two years and that plans and specifications several months ago to contract work on the guns were awarded.

It is understood that the department has been keeping the matter secret because it was under the impression that Germany had a secret gun of its own.

The announcement was made after officials of the department had satisfied themselves that Germany has not been to keep the fact secret longer, because the German gun has been known to guns on the U type of submarine. Secretary Daniels has given out no information in the so called war zone.

The guns, which will be built in navy yards are carried out submarines of the U type, and are the first guns of the new guns. The guns surfaces are disappearing guns which have been specially designed for the purpose of position.

They are built so that when the submarine reaches the surface a section of deck may be shifted and the gun will rise immediately into position. The mechanism is so perfect, it is said, that the gun can be fired in a minute and lowered within a few seconds.

The guns are of three inch caliber and two three inch guns. One will be mounted forward of the conning tower, the use of three guns officials believe will be necessary. It will be needed to protect themselves from any light craft.

The U type of submarine on which the guns will be tried can, are of short radius of action and are designed for use mainly in attacking merchant vessels. They are approximately 200 feet in length and displace 730 tons.

FIRE FINISHES CHURCH ARGUMENT

Building Destroyed in Blaze Supposed to have been Caused by an Incendiary. Two Factions Appeared in Congregation.

The Church of God, located about one and a half miles east of the Mont Alto sanatorium, was destroyed by fire Thursday morning. The fire is believed to be of incendiary origin.

The building was totally destroyed and the loss is estimated at $2,000. It was a frame edifice, size 35 by 50 feet. It was an old structure and about a mile distant from the new church. There was no insurance.

For more than a year past there has been internal disturbance in the church, some of them reaching almost to personal violence. This destruction practically ends the legal proceedings which had been begun to determine ownership.

One faction was headed by the leading elder, Jacob Hoover, a native of that vicinity, and the other contestants were the followers of Rev. W. D. Stine, of Greencastle, who served this congregation in connection with his duties. Mr. Stine is the local supporter of the Maryland and Pennsylvania conference while the Hoovership regards the conference as a needless appendage.

The Stine people held service in the church on Saturday night and also on Sunday evening. On Sunday afternoon, Rev. Stine, it is reported, left lowers broke open the shutters and locked the doors of the church and school. It was also discovered that the window fasteners had been removed.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

Ty Cobb, American League's Heavy Hitter.

Ty Cobb of the Detroit Tigers is playing faster ball this season than ever before in his career. He is at the top of the list as a batter and as to base stealing he is a three by himself. This season Ty Cobb alone has stolen more bases than Speaker, Mathis, Fletcher, Lobert, Burns, Bodgeras and Meyers, of the New York Giants, combined. And not so long ago the Giants leader noted for many years for the pelts. And when one out outmaybe stole more there must be an error or a lapse on one side as there is great cess on the other. Cobb has stolen forty bases so far, and the eight closest named have stolen thirty-one.

Cobb, says a sporting writer, "could not or cared so many bases for Mr. Stencil lounge as he is getting away with in his own circuit."

Perhaps not. And then again, perhaps yes. A wicker base to Cobb is merely a matter of traveling ninety feet. There may be a slight advantage, but no great edge with Archer, Shortstop Scott, Pitchers Boland, Kliffer, Dauss, etc., throwing against Schalk, Stanage, Carey, Cady, Alnsmith, McKee and others.

Flight of a Golf Ball.

Have you ever seen a test of the flight of a golf ball in a wind tunnel? If not, it may be surprising to know that a golf ball will travel in a breeze a golf ball to carry 300 yards, and yet when the flight is over 300 yards, within A. W. Tillinghast in the Outlook. The experiments were made during the visit at the Oxford-Cambridge varsity team at Princeton and of twelve golf balls was made. John Lowe, captain of the visiting team, observed that none could throw a ball around the course in less than 100 yards of the then seventeenth green. The hole is 147 yards, one demanding a slight middle or short iron, and yet no one could reach the green. With a breeze on the water, the carry of which was considerably less than the yards. It could here been quite possible to keep down a dozen balls, but with the golf ball it was different, for it proved to be of no thicker than a wire. It is possible that a professional baseball player could throw a ball over 300 yards with the flight of a thirteen golf ball, but it is a question whether he would be well worth watching.

A Great Shoe Puller.

Larry Lajoie, the Cleveland baseball comedian at pulling the shot, his stage is a current to the left. He is a big footfall to me and therefore become a great exponent of shoe pulling.

Whitney is perhaps the most remarkable shot putter of the day. He has never developed in this country. He is also the first he weighs more than a few pounds more than half of what Ralph Rose and Pat McDonald do. At the intercollegiate games at Stockholm three years ago Whitney was among the giants in the weight tossing event and finished a good third. About one year ago Whitney began to train for the indoor world by trimming McDonald at the national championship at Boston.

Boxing in Minnesota.

The Minnesota boxing commission has taken a step in the direction of rules that will be installed to appeal to the courts. The commission has decided that one club in each of the three cities—Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth—will be sufficient and if this plan is carried out it will be a good thing for the sport.

The commission has already passed on the application of the Minneapolis Paper, 308 pounds; Ingstrom, 175; footfall, 125; Gallagher, 125; Lee Anderson, 145; middleweight, 158; light heavy, 175, and heavy weight, over 175 pounds.

NEW RULING ON STATE HIGHWAYS

Decisions just Handed Down Clears up Disputed Point about Taking over of County Roads. About Borough Streets.

When and county people interested in the future road work plans will be interested to know that the law in regard to the State Highway Department taking over for purposes of supervision and maintenance portions of county roads or borough streets which are included in the main highway routes of the State System is laid down in an opinion given to the State Highway Commissioner W. H. Connor, First Deputy Attorney General.

The opinion to former Commissioner Robert J. Cunningham that the Commonwealth is not required to take over at any fixed time, these roads, the question having arisen several times in the last six months, especially since June 1, when the highways to the supplemental highway route law of 1919 became State highways.

Deputy Attorney General Keller calls attention to the clear distinction between "county roads" and "township roads," which is made in the Fifth Section of the Highway Act. Under this Act all township roads and abandoned and condemned turnpikes were directed specifically to be taken over by the State Highway Department. This direction did not apply to county roads which are governed by the clause which states, "Such highways are to be taken over in whole or in part from time to time as circumstances and means will permit."

Referring to the State Highway routes running through boroughs Mr. Keller says that the State Highway Department is to be governed by Section 10 of the Sproul Act.

If such a road, street, or highway in a borough or town is a part of a State highway route and has not been improved or reconstructed in a manner satisfactory to the State Highway Department's requirements, the commissioner is authorized, with the consent of the borough authorities, to improve or reconstruct it at the expense of the Commonwealth, but, says the Deputy Attorney General, this consent must be obtained either by an ordinance or resolution of Council, or it may be inferred under the Act of the failure of the borough authorities to file in writing objection with the department within ninety days after the commissioner has notified them of his intention to take over the highway.

BOMBS FOUND ON FOUR FREIGHTERS

None Exploded, However, on Ships From New York.

THEIR ORIGIN A MYSTERY.

Agent Returning From Havre Reports the Finding of Grenades in Cargoes of Foodstuffs—Bombs Found on the Allegs—Van Hunt For Clews on Both Sides of Atlantic.

Attempts made to blow up four freight steamships sailing from New York for Havre in April and May by concealing bombs in the boats became known through the arrival of H. C. Hill, a passenger on the French liner Lafayette, in New York. The vessels were all English freighters that had been chartered by the French line to carry auto trucks, tractors and munitions of war to Havre for the French government.

The first bomb-finding was the Devon City, sailing on April 27, followed by the Allegs, Apr. 30; the Kansan, sailing Coaxet on April 20 and the Healdton on May 3. These ships were loaded at the piers in South Brooklyn. In each of the vessels the bombs were placed at different parts of the ship amid the cargo, and were so timed as to explode after the other sighted home.

Mr. Hill, who walked one of the bombs found in an outstorm case on the Allegs on May 30, was employed as two metal cylinders covered with wax. They were filled with a white substance acrid and the other with some high chemical explosive, the idea being that the acid would eat through the metal and set off the explosive after the ship was in mid-ocean. The second bomb on the Allegs was found on the pier on May 30, hidden in a sack of wheat, by Wheeler & Co., the stevedores, even if it had exploded, Mr. Hill said.

Close Sought in Vain.

French detectives have been searched the cargoes of all ships coming from the United States since the discovery of bombs had been found on the Corsican. Ten tons of flour in the Allegs cargo stored there on May 17 and 18, received from the Pillsbury mills, were among the crews as to the manner in which the bombs had been placed on the ships.

Captain Frazier of the Devon City found two bombs on the piers and also on top of the cargo down No. 5 hold on April 27. He threw one of them over board and the other he kept. It was not armed. However had taken the bombs to the bottom of the hold, but at the time to secure them to the autotruck in which they were found.

The finding of these explosives on the four British freighters caused a sensation in Washington from House, and the piers in South Brooklyn where the ships docked service agrees to put some clew, but without success.

It was after the receipt of this message from Havre that the following instructions were issued to the employees of the Bush Terminal piers not to allow any strangers on board the three ships sailing for Havre, and to search also to the officers and crews of other ships of foreign registry that were then in port at the time, even though the vessels were not bound for the ports of the Holland-American line issued similar instructions to the Bush Terminal companies prohibiting any package being taken on board any of the vessels its first being opened on the pier for examination.

Washington Officials Silent.

Officials in Washington requested that the finding of the bombs should not be made public, as it might hinder the work of the agents of the warring guilty persons.

The British government, British consul generals in New York, admitted that he had received word from Havre that bombs being secreted on the four steamships, but that no bombs had been found and discovered in Washington or Havre regarding the finding of the bombs.

Mr. Hill said that he was the first passenger to embark on the homeward conquest of Switzerland, Italy and France.

THE SHADOW

By M. QUAN

Copyright, 1920, by the Metropolitan Newspaper Service.

"What manner titles?"

Are they not strange?

In the days of the Overland trail, before the widow Bandy found a cabin to rent in the fort, a succession of "Mrs. Bandy's" had been buried over the seven prairies and rivers that lay between and every one of them turned toward the El Dorado. None of the husbands of these women, more than two men, women and children, had died a natural death, but heart breakings, even in the presence of the Indian, were common enough to lay and crowding and breaking like deadly scenery by night. Two wagons lead out of the fleet on wilderness and next away in a night's work. Two wagons—two wives, eight children, three men. It is foolishly dangerous. They drive away in the shadow of night, the children crying and the women pleading.

The Bandy family did not even lose sack. They feel that they have been wronged and bitterly they feel that it is unjust. Nor will listen to no remonstrance. Their husbands' property refuse to receive with those they love. Three men realize that they have been robbed even when they have grown calmer and when something like an apology is borne to them from the main party. They will return to the Bandy family with having shown their "independence."

The little band has gone into a "dog camp"—no wagons, no fire, no fuel, or beast. Three miles farther on there will be a camp with fire and wagons for the darkness. It has been a long, hot day, and man and beast are exhausted but no one complains. Even the children have learned that they are not to ask for a drink.

By and by, all but the sentinel close their eyes in sleep. A single sentinel is taken a man's place. He is armed with no many precious lives measured by each fierce moment of darkness. Many cultures had circled all that day! No, all did not sleep. There were two who did not sleep. A white liberator is one of the crickets, to the rustling of the leaves, to the sighing of the night.

Where is the sentinel? There were two wagons. He stood or sat between them as much as he could, guarding the inmates as for their protection. At midnight the sentinel disappeared. The relief takes up the same position as the predecessor and looks out upon the surroundings. The only change is in the position of the moon. The sentinel has been sinking away until the big crescent has reached the horizon in the west. That shadow is the blackness spot to all the darkness. The relief takes no special attention. Why should he? Was not about dawn, and the shadow cast by the June moon to creep away.

It is 1 o'clock.

Without a thought on his feet, the sentinel has nodded—almost asleep. He knows himself that he is not asleep. He is conscious of the rumpass to peer and there, but all is quiet.

The sentinel at his knee grows many feet nearer to the hour. He has not taken his breast nor turned his head from the base of the plant, but his eyes do not leave the spot. He makes no rest shadows to the east; so do the horses in the corral. The stars and shadows are but shadows. The perfect silence of the night hide no danger, but to no feeling of security, and he assures himself that he will not be caught without even an alarm to wake the lightest sleeper.

"Ha! What's that?"

Not a shadow, not a rustling, a faint noise of something stirring. A prowling beast of prey, a wolf, a bear, a lion? He is dashing about in hopes to pick up something. He is not afraid of any of the carnivora—that's all. How silly to be startled by a shadow!

The shadow! It has grown until it is a huge blotch on the prairie and the feet. Will he take warning now? Will he run to the wagons and shout? Will he keep creeping forward as the black shadow creeps, or will he, in the manner of a specter, freeze on the ground at a point where he is? He is not afraid, or two to relieve his limbs and glances over at the horses.

From the blackness of the shadow a dark figure moves. It is not a man. It is more like a centaur's skull, and the head is that of a horse. Two great eyes were in the rump—shadow, shining and unwavering, and from the body of this inhuman beast there were no more signs of life. Then the figure of a man arrived two to torture and captives!

A few moments more and the two centaurs—he planner, he rebels, and the shadow creeps on. The sentinel is the dead to ground. The wolf crew creeping down to the horrid feet. he eyes blazing with greediness and his yellow fangs slumbering on he drew closer and—now. Half a mile away on the line of the wagons the sentinel drew their heads from under the wings and uttered a howl even louder! They could not fly in the direction of the wagons because of the wolf to gorge themselves, but nothing would dot There would be plenty left

LIGHTNING HIT TWO BUILDINGS

Residence and Store are Damaged. New Chester Has Terrifying Experience when Three Strokes Follow Each Other Rapidly.

In a terrific electrical storm which passed over New Chester, between seven and eight o'clock Monday evening, the home of C. Wesley Lott and the residence of William Shank were struck, and damage was done at both places.

A large tree opposite the residence of Jefferson McIlhenny and near the Reformed church, was also struck.

The three claps of thunder following the strokes of lightning in rapid succession terrified the residents of the village and of the county nearby, and it was feared that more serious harm had been wrought.

Mr. Shank was alone in the house at the time her residence was struck. She was severely stunned but retained consciousness and is recovering slowly from the effects of the experience. The bolt struck in the upper portion of the house just at the gable end, and knocked down a slotter, shattered a window, and splintered all the woodwork about the room. Another minor damage was done about the place, which the lightning did not take fire.

The strokes of lightning which damaged the Winand property also hit in the upper part of the building. It struck one of the chimneys, tore off some of the weather boarding, and splintered the woodwork on the inside of the structure. A shutter was torn off and the plastering on the inside was damaged in the room of the building at the time.

The rainfall was reported over most of the county Monday evening but storms were experienced at only a few places, the downpour being partially and over a well defined path. In the mountains to the north the storm severe and the display was dazzling while it lasted.

Those portions which had the rain benefited greatly by it, the farmers welcoming it heartily.

OUR OXFORD ROAD

Thought she was in Maryland after Crossing Mason-Dixon.

The Cumberland Valley miner in the Philadelphia "North American" says:

Recently a Chambersburg man drove his family to Gettysburg. He was a Pennsylvania Dutchman, but went with him, and the little one commented on the excellent condition of the roads as they were met. After descending a hill, the father decided to go on toward York for a short cut to the rebuilt road from Gettysburg east. As the car rolled along over the rebuilt road, which is five beyond question, the little daughter looked up at father with:

"Now we are in Maryland aren't we, papa?"

She had been used, in going to Gettysburg, to considering the first remark from an elder, as soon as the good road was hit, that the state line had been crossed.

SAVED AUTO

John Shoemaker's Machine Taken from Shed Near New Oxford.

John Shoemaker, of near Littlestown, motored in his new Buick car, to the home in the town of Shoemaker, who lives on the Himes farm, about one mile west of New Oxford, Saturday afternoon. He placed the car in the wagon-shed disconnecting the wires attached to the battery and removed those wires which connect the magneto, believe he had forgotten the key to the car.

During the evening the car was stolen from the shed, carried to a hill, at some distance from the farm, where the wires were connected and the wires were properly, were compelled to let the machine stand. The car which was recovered is valued at $1000.

DEAF FOLK WILL HOLD CONVENTION

State Association will Gather at Gettysburg Next Month and Conduct their Sessions in the Court House. Expect Many to Come.

Gettysburg is to have the privilege of entertaining an unusual convention, to have next month when the Pennsylvania Society for the Advancement of the Deaf will hold their annual meeting at this place. It is expected that more than a hundred will be present, the majority of them being both deaf and dumb.

The dates for the convention are August 12, 13, 14, and a number of requests for rates have already been received from various parts of the State. The members of the society will stay at the hotels and in private homes, a number of the boarding house proprietors having been asked to take the delegates.

The meetings will be held in the Adams County Court House and, while the sessions will be of importance to the members, it is expected that many local people will find them very interesting in the manner in which they are conducted. Letters received from some of those who expect to come to the effect that they attend them, having learned to interpret the lips, can understand what others are saying, and that all the discussions may be held in the usual way.

The Pennsylvania Society for the Advancement of the Deaf has as its officers several of the men who are prominently associated with a large and successful institution at Mt. Airy near Philadelphia, and a number of the persons coming to the convention here in August are former pupils of that school.

In addition to the in-door sessions of the convention, a number of delightful trips will be taken and the outing promises to be one of pleasure and profit to those who enjoy it.

CAN SOON GET EXPERT ADVICE

Farmers will be Given Benefit of State's Advisory Beginning August First. Can Get them by Applying to Department.

Adams County farmers, who have benefited in the past from the arrangement, and those who expect in the future to avail themselves of the service, will be concerned in the announcement coming from the office of N. B. Critchfield, State Secretary of Agriculture, that the ten farm advisors will again be subject to call on after August first.

The work will be directed from department headquarters, so that persons desiring the services of the men employed for this branch of the department's work, will need only to write either the Secretary or the Deputy Secretary of Agriculture, at Harrisburg, stating the line of work concerning which they wish to receive information, the probable length of time that will be required, and their willingness to pay the transportation and subsistence of the representative from, and return him to the most convenient railroad station, after the work.

The farm advisors' work of the surveying lasts during the time the legislature was begun August 1, 1919, being authorized by a special Act of Assembly passed at the extraordinary session of the legislature.

In accordance with the terms of the act, the Secretary of Agriculture appointed ten persons, deemed to be qualified by training and experience in the science of agriculture, to visit the farms in the several places as should be indicated by the men made for such service.

In order to form nearly as possible, the most important forms of agricultural work, the advisors were appointed for giving instruction and demonstrations concerning soil improvement and general crop production, two persons to give special attention to the care of orchards and poultry products, two persons assigned to the study of animal husbandry, including the dairy industry, and one person to each of the following subjects, viz: Fruit growing and market gardening, co-operation in buying and selling, farm labor and power supply, and the subject of domestic science.

The call that was made by the public upon the department for the services of these advisors as soon as the work was organized, demonstrated the importance and value of the importance and the reports of work done by the appointees showed such a widespread interest that the field in some branches of the work outlined in the legislative act was found to be inadequate, and it was not until the fifth call further scoring came. Mahaffie and Bankhead were out on the first, and Herrell scored them with a hit to right. The last tally came in the sixth when Swartz got a hit, went to second on a passed ball and scored on Mahaffie's hit.

ONE GAME FROM FOURTH POSITION

Gettysburg Has its Chance to Rise within a Few Days. Chambersburg and Hagerstown Fall Backward in League Race.

By taking Thursday's game from Chambersburg 7 to 2, the Patriots jumped up to within one half game of the Maroons, and just one game of Hagerstown. If Martinsburg can be successfully handled, while Hanover is trouncing the Franklin Countians, Gettysburg will be out of last place by the end of the week, and if Hagerstown can beat Frederick, fourth place is in sight.

Martinsburg is going strong, however, and has a mighty good chance of showing of any team in the league at this time. Their percentage of victories is mounting rapidly and, with a good pitching staff, and a team that can both hit and field, will give Gettysburg a busy time of it.

Greenwalt's effort for Gettysburg on Thursday's game and was master of the situation when the hits, the tallies scored in the third on Snyder's three bagger and Dunn's hit. Then the run-less in the fourth when Clay hit safely and was safe on second when Mosser, Miller dropped a throw from Klein's bunt, a trick that the short stop repeated later in the game. Greenwalt's sacrifice fly, base on Moseley's sacrifice, and Clay scored on Masterson's slow out to Bigler. Thingss looked bad but Greenwalt settled out, and Stewart was an easy out.

Gettysburg tallied a pair of runs in the fourth, Deal hit to Snyder, second and took third on Mossley's wild throw to first, and Deal's fly to Snyder scored on Mahaffie's sacrifice fly, and Deal tallied on a passed ball. In the fifth Bigler, Deal, Mahaffie and Swartz and a hit by Plank filled the bases with one out. Bashore forced Bigler, Herrell scored on Mahaffie's hit, and Mosser fled out to left, ending the inning, and it was not until the fifth that further scoring came. Mahaffie and Bankhead were out on the first, and Herrell scored them with a hit to right. The last tally came in the sixth when Swartz got a hit, went to second on a passed ball and scored on Mahaffie's hit.

ATTACKED ON A COUNTRY BRIDGE

With robbery as his evident motive Thomas Little, of Emmitsburg, attacked Miss Mary Barry, aged 46 years, in a bridge near that place. He was fought off by a farmer who happened along.

Little was arrested later by Constable Ott, of Emmitsburg, who was deputized for the purpose, given a description by Supervisor Shaff at Emmitsburg, and lodged in the Frederick county jail in default of $1,000 bail for the action of the August grand jury.

The alleged assault occurred late in the afternoon on the bridge about one mile south of Emmitsburg.

Miss Barry was so badly bruised following her encounter, that she was given a room and medical attention, for one of her arms which was bruised when she was struck with the iron. Her face bore the imprint of the fingers scored in the dirt on Snyder's throw to first. Mosley, Bigler and Deal filled the bases with one out, Greenwalt forced McMillan at home, and Bigler fled out to left, ending the inning, and it was not until the fifth that further scoring came. Mahaffie and Bankhead were out on the first, and Herrell scored them with a hit to right. The last tally came in the sixth when Swartz got a hit, went to second on a passed ball and scored on Mahaffie's hit.

PLAN TO DEVELOP ALASKAN MINES

Capital Ready to Extract as Much Metal as Needed.

GOLD RUSH NOW EXPECTED

Steamship Lines Already Assured to Join Big Interests. Central Lines Railroad—Demands of War Call For More Extensive Mining Operations. New Copper Metals.

As a result of the conditions created by the European war American capitalists, under the leadership of the house of J. P. Morgan & Co., are about to enter upon the development of Alaska on a tremendous scale.

The enterprise has come about through the crying demand for copper, zinc, lead and other metals needed in the making of the ammunition which is pouring into the European battlefields in limitless quantities daily, and the enormous depletion in the world's supplies of these metals which is expected to cause a demand for gold at the conclusion of the conflict such as never known before.

The Morgan scheme, also, lead and other ammunition metals, and Alaska has the gold.

The plans of the Morgan capitalists have come to light in connection with the ocean transportation and the dismantling of the Alaska steamship concern which has been the principal carrier to the rich coast states and Alaska.

At the same time the Morgan firm has brought out $150,000,000 in bonds of the Central Lines railroad, which owns properties in Alaska, with indications that further issues will be made to finance over in the course of the next few months.

Managements Interlock.

The steamship line in Alaska Steamship company is the same as the Central Lines railroad in Alaska, the Alaskan mining property in which these companies are interlocked. The same management controls the Copper River and Northwestern railway, which runs to the Kennecott mines, which are the principal mines in the interior the Morgans may extract ore. The life of the railroad is a matter of 300 miles, opening up an agricultural region and reaching the coal fields of Bering sea and Matanuska.

With the addition to this railroad and the vast railroad project which the United States government has undertaken in the development of Alaskan resources, railroad men say that the days to Alaska are worth spending time to the far west with the opening of the Panama canal will be cut down by one half to the coast.

It is to meet these demands that the increase of steamship facilities to Alaska is to be undertaken by the dealings in the International Mercantile Marine, the great steamship combination owned by the Morgan interests, but established under the laws of New Jersey to operate the Atlantic and the Pacific coast steamships from the Atlantic coast to that the two Morgan lines at present operate from Seattle and Vancouver to New York to Alaska.

Copper Output Opened.

Already the Kennecott Copper corporation, which is the Alaska Steamship Copper company, has opened up an additional mine, according to the Alaska mine, is expected soon to take over the entire output of the Kennecott properties of Alaska and forge ahead otherwise for the acquisition of other properties for shipments on a vast scale to supply the European war demands. The Public service companies having metal properties in the Alaskan mining interests have too much fear of the Morgan combines in the southern republic.

LARGE CONTRIBUTIONS

Orphanage Anniversary a Success in Every Way.

Receipts amounting to $540 were taken in at the anniversary exercises at the Hoffer Orphanage near Littlestown on Thursday when a crowd estimated at 2000 by Rev. J. Stewart Hartman, the superintendent, was present at the institution. They were from Littlestown, Hanover and Gettysburg principally, a company of happy children there.

The exercises included an address by Rev. W. F. Hore, superintendent of the Bethany Orphans' Home at Womelsdorf, and the singing of the "Star Spangled Banner" in patriotic time by the orphans. Receipts of $168 was lifted, while a large proportion of the large audience was fed from refreshments at the numerous booths and stands.

Mrs. Hartman, of the Women's Missionary Society of the United Brethren Church, of Gettysburg, conducted the exercises.

Separation is Reasonable.

The Roumas is superstitious. He has popular tales that mark the red-headed man and the man without a mustache as strange characters who are sure to work mischief. In some parts of the country there are still old people who believe that a red-headed person knits ill witches. Many old tales are current concerning cats, for instance, that of burying the dead cat with accounts for the fact that in some parts of the country a flower is planted on the tail of a cat.—Marvin Dana in Girl of Marriageable age.

WAIT NOW FOR NEW STREETS

No Use for Borough to Build Water Courses when New Roads are Likely to be Constructed here within Short Time.

With the prospect of paved streets in view, the highway committee of the borough council has decided to defer the construction of the "water tables" on the streets where the new pavement is to be laid. If the paving proposition becomes a reality this will mean that there will be no need of having the work without, only to have it torn up when the streets are reconstructed by borough or property owners.

It is stated now that the prospect for the paving of the streets and the cost of construction of the new pavement will be made known in time. The request for this help was made by the borough council, and a decision that it would be granted as an early date, and the necessary preliminaries taken up at once by them. Public service companies having underground pipes, and telephone and burg streets will take up the matter of seeing that their lines are all right so that they will not have to dig up the years to come to disturb the paving of the purpose.

The action of the highway committee of the town council in pushing the matter of the borough streets, curbs about town is acting as a stimulus to the work of the other departments all over the borough. All of Baltimore street from the Court House Building is to be curbed, and on the squares where it has been completed about half of the curbing and gutters have been replaced with new concrete materials, Liberty and Washington streets have been given the curbs this year while work has now been started on Breckenbridge, at the north end of the square.

The main thoroughfares are accordingly getting sidewalks that are a credit to the town, and removing one of the causes for complaint from residents. The work is also in line with paving proposition another serious matter with the borough.

SCIENTISTS SEE MANY CHANGES

Submersible Cruiser or Sea-going Submarine Planned.

Chief Wright Eyes That it is Event of War it Would be Difficult to Secure Engines For Sufficient Number of Submersibles—Tried Subsoon Meets Hearty Approval.

Inventors and scientists whose names have been mentioned as possible colleagues with Thomas A. Edison on the new navy advisory board have been asked for their views on changes in methods of warfare.

The question, based on the statement by Secretary Daniels that the war has little to render present warfare obsolete, were whether or not some new kind of ship and methods of warfare is imminent; what the next important development in the navy, and how long it will be before it is likely to be, and how important a part in these changes the scientist will take.

Replies to these questions from Edison Maxim, inventor of the machine gun, Professor Reginald A. Fessenden, inventor of wireless control of torpedoes; Charles F. Kettering, the famous electric expert, and Orville Wright, the aeroplane inventor, were received.

Mr. Maxim considers the problems now facing submarine craft to answer to the submarine and as effective weapons of getting an enemy out of modern trenches without the presence of men in artillery positions and lines.

Mr. Steinmetz is looking forward to the development of the "submersible cruiser," a sea going submarine which, when submerged, could travel more successfully with the battle cruiser.

Mr. Wright, ex-president and secretary of the aviation branch of the United States signal corps, says that there would be difficulty in obtaining a sufficient number of submersibles to be of war because of the scarcity of enough reliable motors. Gas engine motors can be made here rapidly enough to meet all requirements, but Mr. Steinmetz points out that, according to reports, the life of an engine of this type in use is only about seven hours of actual service.

Developing New Cruiser.

In regard to Mr. Steinmetz's views, a Washington dispatch says:

A fast cruiser of large cruising radius which can be used as a submarine if need be, and which would be very well known nationally that no one will have to ask "What submarine is that?" "Who is he?" These men can discuss the matter at any length and in confidence.

The board will be small, but it will have the best brains in the world, it seems, on the subject to be tackled; it is not an idle hope when we think that America have invented to engage in a task of such moment to the nation on earth. If we had had such a board twenty years ago, and even as late as today as late to contract the submarine and the aeroplane, the world would not be and exclusively American inventions.

Edison invented the phonograph, the aeroplane and the submarine. I am informed by a gentleman of Senator Seymour that when Elmer Lahs went to Washington to see the navy people he could not get a patent at first. When I went to Washington I had the same to me. He was so far behind in his conception of the submarine that there was an extension of time and gave him more courage. Now there are big bankers in his home town and put the submarine on a basis that is making them rich.

If Mr. Lake had been allowed to fail at that time one of the only two more building submarines today would have gone out of business. It is now a well established fact in the navy that the new board must interest Mr. Lake, and, if he is approached, he will be given quite most be encouraged, and possibly

I believe in preparedness for war, but preparedness on a scientific basis, not on the basis of the big army, the mint of money and millions of men, but by a mint of machinery. The future seamen of the United States will not be swabbing decks and carrying in laundries. There is coming a time when a man, may or may not be in as officer in the United States navy who specialized in some electrical or mechanical line. Gold lace will disappear and the man who has the most will come the man in cap and overalls

MOVE AGAIN FOR STREET PAVING

Highway Committee of Town Council Secures Approval of County Commissioners. Will Present their Request to State Authorities.

Further action to secure the paving of several Gettysburg streets was taken on Tuesday when the highway committee of the town council appeared before the county commissioners and secured their approval to the present plan. A letter from the commissioners will be presented with the borough's request to the Highway Department of Pennsylvania on Wednesday.

Under the present plans Chambersburg street is to be paved from the Eagle Hotel to Centre Square, while Baltimore street is to be paved from Centre Square to Stevens's avenue. The State is to pay half and the borough is to finance the remainder, the town, the property owners and the transit company dividing the cost.

The letter adopted by the county commissioners Tues. morning and to accompany the borough's request reads as follows:

July 20th, 1915.

State Highway Commissioner,
Harrisburg, Pa.

Dear Sir:—

The attached application of the Borough of Gettysburg for state aid in the construction of 2300 feet, more or less, of the streets in said Borough, and for which the Borough agrees to pay one half the cost of construction and maintenance, has been submitted to the Board of Commissioners of Adams County, and the Commissioners respectfully request that your Department take favorable action upon the petition in order that the said may be built without delay; and further request that said application be given preference over any other application now pending in your Department from Adams County.

This request is made with the distinct understanding that the County of Adams shall not be liable in the first instance or ultimately for any portion of the cost of construction or future maintenance.

Very respectfully yours,

N. R. BEAMER,
S. Mc. EICHOLTZ,
H. N. KEAGY,
Commissioners of Adams County.

Attest:—
GEORGE W. BAKER,
Clerk.

SHIP ON FIRE

Mr. Kana's Company Recently Launched Boat In Danger.

Considerable local interest attaches to the fire which was discovered on board the battleship Oklahoma, launched at the Camden yards of the New York Shipbuilding Company March 23 and just about ready to put to sea. Samuel M. Kana, whose family is spending the summer at Knoxlyn, and who frequently spends his Sundays with them, is president of the company.

The fire occurred at the Camden yards of the company last night about seven o'clock.

A double cordon of company guards was at once thrown about the yards.' The first line surrounded the outer limits of the yard, driving back every one except officers of the company and firemen. A second line took position inside the yards close to the burning ship as a double precaution in case any one got through the first line.

The officers of the company refused to give any information except that the fire started under gun turret No. 1. It was said a watchman was on board at the time. Officers of the company would not say whether or not the ship contained ammunition or explosives, and denied they had any reason to suspect incendiarism.

Fifteen minutes after the companies had left the scene they were called back for a second fire, which was not extinguished until 45 minutes later.

A third fire broke out on the Oklahoma at 11:30 o'clock, and the fire companies were again called to the scene. The third fire broke out in turret No. 2, on the other end of the battleship.

Superstition in Roumania.

The Roumanian is superstitious. He has popular tales that mark the red-headed man and the man without a mustache as strange characters who are sure to indemnify. In some parts of the country there are still old peasant beliefs in witches. Many old amuletsharbo customs remain, as, for instance, that of burying the dead with uncovered faces. In some parts of the country a flower is painted on the ball of a coffin wherein lives a girl of marriageable age.

FOR NEW HOTEL

Working on Plans for Blue Mountain House.

Baltimore people is telling of a new summer Blue Mountain House to be built on the ruins of the old hotel on the mountain side, after this information:

"Baltimore have been asked on two styles of buildings—one a three-story brick building and the other a frame building with all modern improvements. A contractor in Waynesboro is making the plans and specifications.

"Options have been acquired on 25 acres of land on the site of the old Blue Mountain House, and it is understood the company proposes to acquire eventually some 400 acres around the proposed hotel, which will be developed into bungalow for summer dwellers.

"The hotel is expected to be ready to open next spring."

MUST SAVE UMPIRES

Mob Scenes on League Diamonds Must be Stopped.

President Boyer, of the Blue Ridge League, wrote an official letter to presidents of the clubs, calling on them to take steps to prevent outbreaks against the umpires. The letter reads in part as follows:

Much to my regret there have been several times recently that games have been interrupted and delayed, somebody who have threatened the official umpire.

Nearly every case can be traced to players "baiting" umpires for one reason or another, and the effect of that official.

These occurrences do our League a great harm, and must be stopped at once. You as officers of this League should use every effort in your means to prevent any such affairs again happening on your field.

BIGLERVILLE HAS LARGE RESERVOIR

Capacity of almost Two Million Gallons in Container recently Completed. Modern Construction Methods were Used.

Biglerville's new water reservoir has been completed and is now in active service, providing that town with adequate water supply for many years. The original facilities were found to be insufficient in enlarged the town in case of fire. At a time of long continued drought and the extra size reservoir was accordingly determined upon.

The new container is located on Yellow Hill road and is of thoroughly modern construction. It is built of solid Portland cement re-enforced with iron and steel. The reservoir is 221 feet long and 171 feet wide while the depth at the center is sixteen feet. This provides a capacity of 1,936,000 gallons.

The average gravity flow is 86,000 gallons per day and the fall is sufficient to provide Biglerville with ample fire protection without the use of any steam or automobile engine.

The reservoir is owned and operated by the Biglerville Water Company which several years ago laid its mains throughout the town and for a number years operated with a smaller reservoir satisfactorily. The demand for water increased, however, necessitating the four of a shortage in supply during dry seasons made a larger container necessary with the result that the new reservoir was determined upon. It is now in service and a matter of pride both to the company and the community which it serves.

GERMANY'S FOOD SUPPLY WILL PREVENT SHORTAGE

Red Cross Director Says Country Has Supplies to Last Until Nov. 1.

Ernest P. Bicknell, national director of the American Red Cross, who has been directing the Rockefeller funds for relief work throughout the European war zone, has returned to Washington. He says an inventory of the supply in Germany shows no shortage except of sugar and fats, but in Servia where there is much destitution, there is considerable flour, also, as well as in Albania and the Balkan states, generally.

"In Poland there are no outsiders except in relief work, but there is a large amount of food being sent in. Immediately to the south are Austrian, German and Austrian military concentrations and the supply is directed by committees of the Polish people. Turkey is receiving some help from Germany and Austria. The amount of wheat now in sight used in connection with the new crop will be ample for the small amounts of Cereales and vegetables where

OBSERVE DOUBLE SILVER WEDDING

Two Bridal Parties of Twenty Five Years ago Spend Day Near Scene of their Marriages. Children Celebrate Day with them.

Just twenty five years after a double wedding was performed at Mt. Joy parsonage, the two brides and bridegrooms of a quarter century ago, on Saturday held their silver anniversary with their immediate families.

On July 17, 1890 John E. Mellonsell, of Gettysburg, and Miss. Mary Richter, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Richter, of Reveley's township, were married at the parsonage by Rev. H. M. Heilman. At the same time John W. Bollinger and Miss Lillie Keefer, of Hanvey, were married, the same minister performing the ceremony.

Mr. and Mrs. McDonnell have since lived in Gettysburg where Mr. McDonnell continues a successful business as paper hanger. The Bollinger family are residents of Greenmount, this county. All decided that the most appropriate place to hold the anniversary celebration was within sight of the parsonage where the double ceremony was performed, and an attractive spot near Rock Creek was accordingly chosen. The two families went out early Saturday intending to spend the entire day there.

Those in the party were Mr. and Mrs. J. E. McDonnell, Mr. and Mrs. Luther McDonnell, Carroll and Hennery McDonnell, Mr. and Mrs. John W. Bollinger, Mr. and Mrs. Russell Rasver, Mr. and Mrs. John Null, Edgar, Mary, Jean, and Sterling, Frederick, Edith and Mildred Bollinger.

NATION'S GENIUS TO AID OFFICERS IN PERFECTING OUR DEFENSES

Edison Heads Advisory Board and Will improve Submarines.

Orville Wright to Give His Aid In Developing Air Craft.

ANNOUNCEMENT by Thomas A. Edison and Secretary of the Navy Daniels offer to bend the brilliant brain of civilian experts for the greatest benefit of America in the present crisis, was received with gratification by the officials of the navy department and has evoked much favorable comment. Mr. Edison's appointment as chairman of the naval advisory board on inventions and development, with authority to call to his assistance other men of his own choice, is considered by officials of the department as the most important step taken since the beginning of the war in the direction of preparedness.

Secretary Daniels extended his invitation to Mr. Edison in a letter in which he expressed his gratification for the interest of the inventor and manifested his desire to develop some great inventive genius for the benefit of the country at the call of your own country."

Can Render a Great Service.

"Such an attitude in these all too momentous times is one that should call an inspiration to our young men, the secretary continued, "and I feel that the pre-eminent field of one's country

Has Only Thanks to Give Him.

"For our part, we will endeavor not to bother you with trivial matters, as we will probably have more difficult affairs to handle such small matters as you can dispose of in a brief time as you will, and I unfortunately have nothing but the thanks of the people of the republic, of the country at large, together with the feeling of satisfaction in the country that you will have to offer you by way of remuneration. Yet we cheerfully give you shown your patriotism and your remarkable loyalty to your country's interests that I feel justified in making this request.

"If you feel that you would be willing to do this, I would like to have you when any plans are somewhat matured to call on myself with you or in the details of the organization you need, so that I can get your ideas as far as possible for the purpose in mind."

Edison Gladly Accepts.

In announcing that he would gladly accept the appointment as chairman Mr. Edison said that he believed the best results would be had if the board be attended to at once, while the war situation was uppermost in the minds of the importance of encouraging and developing inventions by civilians and Americans, especially officers and men of the navy and marine corps.

"The United States is far behind in these matters," he said, "and I sincerely believe it is highly important for a board of experts to be called upon by naval officers from leading industries to be formed to consider and develop any new possibility of ideas developed by young men. While all ideas shall not be practicable, yet many be feasible, at least they will have the benefit of expert consideration.

"In addition to the advisory board mentioned in the bill, I would request a department of experimentation, where ideas submitted by the public may be sound be rendered. Only a few acres of land would be required, with proper buildings and a corps of skilled men allotted to carry out experiments under the direction of those suggesting the ideas, after they have been approved.

"The Emperors war has served to draw attention to the fact that many ideas of great value to humanity have been allowed to slip by, and if this nation is put on earth the fact that there is danger of it being forgotten. They are called upon to do in order to defend it fully in warfare, both on land and sea."

CHILDREN GIVE PRETTY PAGEANT

Novel Entertainment Produced by Boys and Girls of Gettysburg at Close of Week of Work and Fun. Avon Players Assist them.

As delightful as it was unique, "The Pageant of Average Town", given on Friday by 150 Gettysburg boys and girls as the climax to their week of play and work on Junior Chautauqua, was one of the best and most enjoyably attractive ever staged here on a similar occasion.

For the past six days the young actors, under capable direction, have been holding "town meetings" in which their own committees reported on unsanitary and unsightly conditions as they found them in Gettysburg, whereupon, the youthful citizens would resolve to vast the fly, to keep the town clean, and do every-thing in their power to make Gettysburg a better place.

Doubtless they found it an "average town" and on Thursday they presented in pageant form just about what conditions may be found in such a community. The entertainment opened with Miss Eleanor Neely, one of the Avon players, dressed in unkempt fashion and representing "Average Town." About her were all the nuisances of a village. Harbert Gene Helsdel in grotesque costume represented the fly, Edward McPherson was the mosquito, Barbara Ruth was the "sandwich board" of a plaster supposed to carry milk, while Master Arthur Bushler carried another board on which was depicted the condition of a typical ugly back yard. Surrounded by all these nuisances accompanied-ments of an unpretentious community was "Average Town" full asleep.

On this scene there entered two fairies, "Wake-Up" and "Clean-Up", in the persons of Bromley Ammon and Elizabeth Bushler. With them were fourteen boys and girls led by Samuel Barnes and Lorlie Bender who strove in vain to rouse the sleeping Average Town. Then along came "Health", Miss Helen Dandorf; "Cleanness", William Kittmiller; the "Flowers", Mary Ruth Tyke and Anna Mitchell; "Music", Jamie Hollinger; and the "Birds", Jenora Heindel, all in attractive costume.

Average Town resented their intrusion, wanted to keep on sleeping with all the unlovable characters about her and three "earnest" appeared to protest against disturbing the slumbers. They were Pauline Jean, Donald Warner and Fred Nace. They thought the town was good enough in other years, why not good enough now; that to clean up would cost too much money, and that anyway these would always be flies and mosquitoes, so why bother?

Suddenly "Play", in the person of Leon Pearson, one of the Avon players entered to find all the progressive elements discouraged. All the children of the Junior Chautauqua were summoned to help. Average Town woke up, her unpleasant costume was changed to one of beauty, every one got busy, the fly, the mosquito, the ugly back yard, and the impure milk disappeared, songs and games came in and all joined in the chorus

"I'm proud of my town"

Is my town proud of me?!"

With the announcement that the transformation had been possible only through the help of the children and by means of play the entertainment came to a close.

Throughout the action songs and games were used, showing the many delightful features that the boys and girls have enjoyed during the past week. The large number of happy children alone would seem to have made the scene a success but the pageant was its crowning event.

Earlier in the afternoon the boys had their usual big time with their scenarawhs, hand springs, pyramids and stunts of walking on their hands and standing on their heads, with other gymnastics.

The illustrated lecture by Chauncey J. Hawkins, depicting his personal experiences with the "Bright Eyes and Wild Beasts of Our Boyhood Woods" delighted a large audience on Friday evening and gave the Chautauqua such an excellent send-It was an unusual offering and one that pleased very generally. The pictures of the afternoons parade were a pleasant finale to the first evening.

Services were held in the Chautauqua tent on Sunday morning at eleven o'clock when Platform Superintendent Turner made an address on "The Mission of Chautauqua." Owing to the fact that services were held in all the churches of town at the same hour, the attendance was only about 150.

Sunday evening the big tent was filled. Dr. Turner preached the sermon of the evening, the singing was led by George P. Black and Master Edwina Knappi played several correct selections.

The Crawford Adams Trio again delighted local people. Mr. Adams was most generous and played a large number of selections, which were requested by persons in the audience. The company appeared both afternoon and evening. The change in arrangement was required shortly before the beginning of the second program.

Dr. S. Parkes Cadman's lecture on "A Modern Babylon" was generally accepted to have been one of the best of a long series which have been upon platform. He covered a wide scope and held his audience for more than an hour with the greatest ease.

Colangelo's Italian Band was the musical feature of the evening. The famous concert was somewhat disappointing but is the evening they delighted an audience which practically filled the big tent. The organization put forth a generous effort but was the only Italian band which ever appeared before a Gettysburg audience for more ble storms of applause upon their rendition of "El Miserere", "The Miserere" from the opera "Il Trovatore". The solos of Miss Bentley added to the pleasure of the evening.

The Oratorio Artists delighted their Chautauqua audiences on Monday evening with a concert, during their rendition of songs of fifty years ago today appropriate for the Centenial. Flowers discussed the present and future of Gettysburg. Miss Bentley in "The Rebuilding of the Temple." With the famous play, "The Man Who Stayed at Home" which was given by the Avon Players, Gettysburg's Junior Chautauqua came to a close at 11:15 Thursday night. The tent was quickly taken down and with all the paraphernalia was put on a train at 1:45 that afternoon for Bellefonte.

The closing evening was a full one with a prelude by the Grantville Orchestra, a short story and reading by several of the young people connected with the Chautauqua, a lecture by ex-Governor Folk and the singing by the Oratorio Artists and the announcement numbers were used to fill in the time. His subject was "Modern Democracy."

Dr. C. F. Sanders has given this statement to the Compiler:

"Several angagements take me out of town for a week. I trust everybody who is interested in the success of the Chautauqua is a matter for the people of Gettysburg. I have handed in the data bearing on this matter and place a copy of my file at Eckert's Store where any one may call. I hope to bringthe ticket pledge list to a successful conclusion when I return."

"We have pledges for five hundred and two tickets, counting the boys, one hundred and seventy two more. We have twenty six guarantors. This number should be increased to one hundred. The guarantors will endeavor to secure enough pledges and guarantors. They will appreciate the assistance of anyone who has the cause at heart. Pledge blanks are to be had at Eckart's Store, and, when signed, they can be left in charge of Mr. Eckart. If you want Chautauqua, get busy."

IS PUNISHED

Kienkle Quits; Suspended by Manager Gus Dorner.

Kienkle, the big pitcher of the Maroons, who has been touted as one who had an offer from another club at a $125 salary, was Wednesday afternoon suspended by Manager Dorner indefinitely without pay. In the game with Hanover Monday he was put on by Gus Dorner that Kienkle was trying to throw games as well as he can.

In the fifth period he gave two bases on balls and allowed enough hits to score three runs.

Gus then yanked out the big twirler and Sam Ickes went in. By the time spent as a castaway without weekly stipend should be something towards giving him a better slant on waking up the twirler to the possibilities afforded in connection with the pitching staff of the Maroons.

She Knew What It Was.

The teacher, picking up an orange that one lucky boy sat on, remarked that it was a unit. The next day the boy was asked what he knew. Rising up a couple, she asked what they were. "It was on a paper sack from a bright-hued but shy girl answered, "why, that's the axis of a unit."—Lippincott's Chronicle.

Loved Daddy, Too.

Pleasing a flower on my little four-year-old boy's coat, his mother said to him: "You must wear this coat today to show that you love your mother, Edward. In a little while he returned to me, saying: "Mother, I've put this coat on over my vest, so you'll know I love my dad Baltimore.

SUBMARINE HAS 6,000 MILE RADIUS

New American Craft Can Cross the Atlantic Twice.

NEW ENGINE THE SECRET.

Inventor Lake Says the G-3 Can Go to Europe, Do What She Sets Out to Do both by the Lake Torpedo Boat company of Bridgeport, Conn.

The Lake submarine, a dream of Simon Lake, the inventor, lingers on the outskirts of a fame which he has long sought. The efficiency of the new engine has not yet been put to the test enough fast to cross the Atlantic twice on a single tank of fuel.

The Swiss engine drives both on the surface and under water, rejecting fuel double gasoline and electric engines which have been used in the past. Much credit on the surface and the electric engine for the operation of the submarine.

The G-3 is only 100 feet in length. The Simon Lake boats being constructed for the United States navy are 250 feet long. They are to be faster and will have a much greater radius of activity than the G-3. Mr. Lake said that some of the new German U boats had a cruising radius equal to that of the G-3, but that the G-3 was the first American submersible ever to carry war across the ocean. He said that she was built to test out and also use the Swiss engine, would be fitted with anything Admiral Fiptzh now commands.

1,200 Horsepower Engine.

The G-3 is 100 feet long, has a beam of seventeen feet and a draft of 1,200 horsepower, were imported from Switzerland by the Chautauqua, and will be the future be able to make the machines, so that the submarines of the United States submarines will not depend on getting the engines out of warring Europe. The engines were installed in the G-3 at the Lake navy yard, and the tests have been made in the harbor. While they are under the supervision of naval officers of the navy, it is said that the engines of 2,500 miles at the top speed of eleven knots and 6,000 miles running at ten knots a radius of more than 6,000 miles. This would be sufficient to take up and down the length of the sound on the surface, under the water and return to Bridgeport to which the craft would be submitted in actual warfare. The tests showed that they could submerge 14.7 knots an hour on the surface and 8.5 knots an hour submerged under pressure. The G-3 cost $400,000. Mr. Lake was asked to tell what he expeditions the G-3 had developed.

"You can see for yourself the invention; "it is perfectly practicable for the G-3 to cross the Atlantic. While there is no immediate prospect of my attempting doing make, the G-3 will show me the engines can cross the ocean, do what she went to do and come back with out dependence on any base of supplies. That is a great advantage in the economy of fuel."

Mr. Lake said the Swiss engines were basically the same as were being used in the new German submarines but with certain differences. The Swiss engines are constructed on the selection of the specifications of the new engines of the German submarines. It secrets it is said that American inventors had been able to improve on the German and the highest speed motors which will be installed in the new boats.

"When the new boats are finished they can beat the G-3 a half," said Mr. Lake, "they will be a match for any submarines in the world. They will cost $325,000 apiece, will be equipped with air torpedo tubes and will have a cruising radius of much more than 6,000 miles. They will be more than 300 feet long."

MAN ARRESTS HIMSELF.

Marshal Wolf Makes Citizen Wolf to Court and Makes Him Plead Guilty.

Marshal Wolf, of Mount Carmel Borough, Ill., arrested himself on a charge of being drunk and disorderly. Then he hailed himself to court, filed a complaint against himself, had himself arraigned, pleaded guilty, was fined $5, and paid the fine. Then he resigned from his duties.

Two bottles of beer in St. Louis caused Marshal Wolf's trouble. He had been drinking the beer, he pleaded, and doesn't remember what happened. Then, however, a man told him he had been drunk on the street, and Marshal Wolf started out to drum up a case against Citizen Wolf.

Marshal Wolf had a hard time, for the interurban trolley car conductor with whom he rode home refused to believe he had been intoxicated and wouldn't make a complaint.

Marshal Wolf after the retreat was obliged to admit that the evidence was scant, but he had a strong feeling, pleaded to the hearing after, that Citizen Wolf was guilty. So he pleaded guilty.

EXPECT MANY NEW STUDENTS

Enrollment at Gettysburg College this Year will, it is Believed, Surpass that of Any Previous Term. Outlook is Very Bright.

That the number of incoming students at Gettysburg College this fall will exceed that of September, 1914, when all former records were surpassed, is the indication now. The list of prospective new students is longer than in any preceding year, every one of the three departments has at least one occupant and many are filling so that an exceptional enrollment is anticipated.

In view of the graduation in June of no less than sixty Seniors this is regarded with no little satisfaction. There will be the usual percentage of boys who will not return, either through failure to pass their examinations, through going to other schools, or because they wish to enter some line of business. But, looking into account these losses, the enrollment will go beyond that of any other year, if present indications are to be taken as a safe method of estimate.

The building and dormitory rooms are undergoing their usual summer cleaning and will be put in first class condition for the opening of college in the fall. At the Preparatory grounds a new main building is being given a thorough coating of white, changing the building from its cream yellow color which it has held for several years. This, with the additions to be made to it will contribute to make it conform to the colonial style of architecture which is to mark all the new buildings.

Work is going along rapidly on the new residence being erected by Dr. G. D. Stahley on Prep Campus; and George C. Baum, architect for the Board Supervisory Department building was in town this week in connection with the plans for the structure in which work will be started at the earliest possible moment.

Unwilling to Impose on the Lord.

"What does it cost, sah, to send de 'evangelist's notice o' holdin' reunion next week's?" "I calls it plenty foolish, sah!" replied square-headed old Deacon Lubbock. "Unless de Lord Lawd sah's gwine to tumble out o' bed an' get up in de mawnin' to listen to a bunch o' niggers dat's got all day to do dey prayin in!"—Kansas City Star.

Words in Italics in Bible.

Words in the Bible printed in italics indicate that the words so printed do not rightly form a part of the original text, but were adopted by the translators to make the sense of the original clear As used in the Bible italics have no relation to the common practice of using them for the purpose of emphasizing certain words in the text. In many of printing house portions of a book mat properly belongstar to the main work, such as introductions, prefaces, indexes and text necks. were printed in italics, the best itself being in Roman.

Going back into History.

"That somebody crossed Herring strait in search of the Northwest was easily guess nor Indians. There are peoples in the region north of Utell wontok that, given a haircut and a bath, could by no possibility be distinguished from tribes of our Pacific coast aishipelago," said Dr. Hendley. "Clearly, either North Amer ica was peopled from Asia or Asia was peopled from North America. There is no other reasonable explanation to show which continent peopled the other.

Foodstuffs and Their Worth.

Beefsteak and roast vegetables are rich in iron. In meat the iron exists as a hemoglobin compound. The blood contained in the muscular tissue runs to a considerable extent. A certain matter is found in considerable quantity in grains during bears, navy beans, lima beans, spinach especially, cabbage and dried peas are rich in iron. Among the fruits that have iron prunes are dried prunes, apples and raisins.

Insinuative Here.

"The most insidious appearance of this resentment blanks," said Sackville Mc-Gee, "reminds me that Governor Hughes is a hero whole lot less money and jewelry in their possession at present than when they report robberies to the police."—Kansas City Star.
